WANAMAKER ON ROOSEVELT.

Says the Nation Looks to Him to Protect Flag.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 22.—Ex-Postmaster General John Wanamaker was one of the principal speakers at the annual banquet to-night of the Medal of Honor Legion of the United States. Gen. O. O. Howard of Burlington, Vt., who commanded the legion last year, was the toastmaster. Mr. Wanamaker's toast was "The President of the United States." He said:

"The President should be a courageous citizen. President Roosevelt is endowed with the spirit which not only indicates courageous citizenship, but possesses those characteristics which enter into the making of a good soldier and commander. The Nation looks to him to protect the flag which you men have so nobly defended and carried to victory. Your counsel as well as your example should be given to the younger generation in supporting the President, who, it may be said, represents the American ideal in these sterling qualities which appeals to the soldiers as well as the citizen. It would be sad, indeed, if any other policy had been pursued by the richest Nation in the world than the one followed in our pension system and in favoring the soldiers in other ways. The history which the sailor and soldier have given us is one of the glories of the Nation."

Other speakers were Rear Admiral Melville, retired; Gen. Daniel Sickles of New York, Commander in Chief W. W. Blackmar of the Grand Army of the Republic, Major Moses Veale, and Gen. T. S. Peck.

CONGRESSMAN HUNTER LOSES.

Republican Nomination Awarded to D. C. Edwards After Contest.

SOMERSET, Ky., Sept. 22.—After two days of heated discussion the Eleventh District Congressional Committee, by an almost unanimous vote, to-day awarded the Republican nomination for Congress to D. C. Edwards over the incumbent, Dr. W. Godfrey Hunter, ex-Minister to Guatemala.

Two previous attempts to count the vote had resulted in split meetings. To-day's session was enlivened still further by charges made by Hunter men that Judge G. E. Smith of Clinton County, one of the Hunter adherents on the committee, had been drugged by the Edwards faction to prevent his appearance at the meeting.

When the count was finally proceeded with the committee, by a vote of 15 to 1, decided to throw out the vote of Bell County, which, according to the Hunter men, gave Hunter 1,790 and Edwards 998. The Edwards men claimed that Bell County cast 995 votes for Edwards and 085 for Hunter. With Bell County eliminated the committee, by a vote of 15 to 1, awarded the certificate to Edwards, the returns showing a vote of 13,215 for Edwards and 12,399 for Hunter.

CRUCIBLE STEEL BOND ISSUE.

Recommendation Will Be Made to the Company's Stockholders.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Sept. 22.—A bond issue of $6,000,000 or $7,000,000, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 5 per cent., is the recommendation of the management of the Crucible Steel Company of America which will be made at the annual meeting of the stockholders on Oct. 19.

This fact was made known in the statement issued to-night by William G. Park, Chairman of the Crucible Board. Mr. Park reviews the entire history of the company and gives the details of the transaction by which the Clairton plant was sold to the United States Steel Corporation. His statement shows a loss of $1,578,617.17 to the Crucible on account of its Clairton enterprise.

The statement concludes with the assertion that despite its losses, the Crucible could pay all its debts out of its quick assets, leaving a large balance and all its plants free of incumbrances

WANTS WORLD TO AID SOUTH.

Mr. Edmonds Proposes an International Conference on Cotton.

BRETTON WOODS, N. H., Sept. 22.—At the meeting of New England cotton manufacturers here to-day Col. Samuel F. B. Morse of New York, representing R. H. Edmonds of Baltimore, spoke in favor of an international conference of cotton manufacturers.

Col. Morse stated that a movement had been inaugurated by Mr. Edmonds to bring about a visit to this country of some representative English cotton manufacturers. The plan has been favorably viewed by the Southern bankers at their recent New York convention, has been submitted to the Governors of the Southern cotton States, and to other interested associations.

Col. Morse said that many English and Continental manufacturers have gained the belief that some plan had been matured to curtail the crop of cotton in the United States for the purpose of getting more money out of the European and English spinners.

Mr. Edmonds's purpose is to secure an international conference to disabuse the minds of the foreigners and to demonstrate that if properly worked the Southern States could produce twice as much cotton as now, and that the best plan for the foreigners to adopt is to direct the tide of emigration to the Southern cotton States."

The association voted to refer the proposition to the Board of Governors with power to act.

FIRE IN BANK BUILDING.

Blaze at Wall Street and Broadway Threatens First National Records.

Fire started just before midnight last night in the dental offices of M. A. and Julia Carman, on the eighth floor of the United Bank Building, at Broadway and Wall Street, the first floor, basement, and attic of which is occupied by the First National Bank. In the attic above the rooms where the fire was are stored valuable records and books of the bank. None of these was harmed.

Policeman Syperrik of the Old Slip Station saw smoke pouring from the eighth floor windows, and says he thinks the fire must have been smoldering for some hours before it was discovered. Syperrik turned in an alarm, and when Deputy Chief Kruger arrived he ordered the water turned into the stand pipes with which the building is equipped. The blaze was made short work of, and the damage is estimated at $2,000. The dental offices were gutted, but the blaze was prevented from spreading.

For the sake of defining our position in the clothing craft we would indulge in a little brag. It may help you to a better understanding of our shop, its purpose, principles and importance. First you must know that we tailor in our own shops every garment which the Saks label identifies. Our records demonstrate that in the last two years we have designed six hundred and seventeen models of suits and coats for men, each with some specific feature to make it distinctive and individual in itself. The average clothing manufacturer presents about ten in a season. Do you not think that gives us the right to define our stock as exhaustive? It certainly does reverse the old order of things in which the manufacturer was arbiter and dictator. With us you may assume that attitude. In designing the models for a new season's service we are governed by the law of averages. Suits at $15.00, $20.00 and $25.00 have become with us a manner of specialty. All the talent, intelligence and power of our organization of master craftsmen find expression in these garments.

Suits, Topcoats and Raincoats at $15.00.

Single and Double Breasted Sack Suits of excellent fabrics in brown or grey mixtures, black or blue.

Topcoats, 32, 34, 36 or 40 inch box models of covert, whipcord, twill or vicuna in tan, grey, brown, oxford or black.

ODELL REPLIES TO DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Challenges Opponents to Say Where They Would Cut Expenses.

ISSUES TEN-YEAR FIGURES

Governor-Chairman Calls Personal Attacks "a Repetition of the Mud-Slinging Tactics" of Hill.

Refusing to discuss the charges made against him personally in the Democratic State platform adopted at the Saratoga Convention, Governor-Chairman Odell issued a long statement last night replying to other features of that platform. The Governor-Chairman said this statement was the first of a series which would appear during the next month.

The Governor pronounced the personal attack to be "but a repetition of the mud-slinging tactics of ex-Gov. Hill, which had been disapproved of by the people in 1902, and he did not consider it necessary to reply to it."

In making a comparison between the last Democratic administration in 1894 and the Republican administration for 1904, Gov. Odell said it should be borne in mind that since 1899 all fees must be turned into the State Treasury by the various departments; that in 1890 the State population was 6,000,000 and in 1900 7,268,000; that by the Constitution of 1894 the number of Supreme Court Justices and the membership of the Legislature were increased; that the eight-hour law increased the expenses of public works; that the State Care act of 1894 relieved localities of the expense of caring for the insane, and that the school population in 1904 was 1,256,000, as against 1,083,000 in 1894.

Then the Governor says:

"For the purpose of comparison, the following figures, showing the appropriations for the years 1894 and 1904, are given:

	1894.	1904.
State Charities	1,726,016	2,239,960
State Insane	2,158,042	6,085,840
Education	4,676,434	6,558,045
State Prisons	863,484	1,174,635
Good Roads	.....	1,510,774
Grade Crossings	.....	150,000
Legislature	500,138	642,650
Canals	1,531,775	1,746,338
Excise Department	.....	633,455

"If from this increase we deduct the fees which would have been retained by the departments, except for the so-called Higgins law, of $572,577.63, we find the actual increase of these various departments has been $9,120,391.73.

"Can any of the items enumerated above be reduced in any way if the next Administration should be Democratic. The expenses of the judiciary and of the Legislature are fixed by the Constitution and by statute. The State's Charities, Lunacy, and Educational Departments require ever-increasing appropriations because of the increase in population in these institutions and schools. The good roads and grade crossings legislation has met with the approval of the people, and it is not possible to decrease expenditures for these purposes. Nor would our opponents dare repeal the revenue provisions of the liquor tax law, which add so much to local and State revenues.

"While these necessary expenditures have grown because of the facts recited, it should be also added to our credit that we have reduced direct State taxation by increasing the indirect revenues of the State from about $6,000,000 in 1894 to over $22,000,000 in 1904."

ROOSEVELT TO HIGGINS.

ALBANY, Sept. 22.—Lieut. Gov. Higgins, the Republican nominee for Governor, was here to-day and made public the following letter he has received from President Roosevelt:

Oyster Bay, Sagamore Hill,
Long Island, N. Y., Sept. 18, 1904.

My Dear Lieutenant Governor:

Can you come to see me on Wednesday?

You know, without my needing to say it, how pleased I am at your nomination. While I was Governor and you were Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, you and I were thrown very closely together, and I have never had the good fortune to be thrown with any public servant of higher integrity or of greater administrative ability. If you are elected, and I am confident you will be, the people of the State can rest in absolute confidence that the administration of the affairs at Albany will be conducted on the highest possible plane of efficiency and honesty.

With all regard and with congratulations less to you than to the people of this Commonwealth, believe me, your friend.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

HIGGINS TO BE TOLD OCT. 4.

Other Republican Candidates to be Notified Same Day at Olean.

Lieut. Gov. Higgins will be notified of his nomination for Governor on the Republican ticket on Oct. 4 at Olean, his home. At the same time M. Linn Bruce, the candidate for Lieutenant Governor, and the rest of the Republican State ticket will also be notified. This will include Judge Cullen, the Democratic Judge of the Court of Appeals, who has been nominated by the Republicans for the position of Chief Judge, left vacant by Judge Parker's resignation.

Senator Malby, as Chairmanof the Committee, will deliver the notification speech to Mr. Higgins. Other members of the committee will notify the other candidates. Mr. Higgins and the various candidates will reply. Among those who will be present are Senators Platt and Depew and ex-Gov. Frank S. Black, the latter a member of the committee. Gov. Odell will not be present, because it is New York Day at the St. Louis Exposition, and the Governor and his staff will be in Missouri at that time.

Simpson Crawford Co—Daily Bulletin

To-day will continue that extraordinary sale of toilet articles.

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1904.

ONCE there was a tramp who met another member of his "profession on the road."

"Why are you headed for the city?" he asked.

"Oh, Winter's coming and I must be hurrying."

"Nonsense, it's only September," replied the tramp.

"Worse than that," said the city-bound tramp; "I've been offered straw hats fifteen times this morning and that's a sure sign that Winter is all but upon us."

Unseasonable things even as a gift are not desirable.

That's just why we say to you that at all times, no matter what you buy in this store, you'll always find it in season.

We make it a point to always sell in season any seasonable article of merchandise, and it's an imperative rule of the house that no seasonable merchandise shall be carried over into another season.

That's why our stocks are always crisp and new, why we do not tolerate the system of P. M.'s—why you run no risk of getting something that's months behind the current style.

Current styles in flannel house wrappers

HOUSE wrappers are necessary items of comfort on which no small amount of care should be expended. Primarily, a garment of this nature should be becoming (since it must pass... (the figurative ordeal)) of the breakfast table. Secondly, it must in material and construction conform to current styles.

The evolution of the wrapper is a chapter in itself. Even in ordinary developments of flannelette the signal Japanese craze shows in sleeves, (of fancy wash silk, (and trimming bands.)) Broche and Persian patterns control, though striped flannelettes are prettily made up in semi-kimono shaping with a deep Empire yoke, to which the skirt portion is gathered. Baby velvet ribbon in rows of three forms the garniture. The sleeves are in mandarin style.

There's a closely fitted wrapper in (neat black (and white..)) flannelette that has plaits at the back held in place by a short strap belt. The front sets well to the figure, and the sleeves are of the coat shaping. Gathered flounces are noticed on some neat designs in the practicable German flannel (that launders (so well.....)). Strap belts may be worn or not.

THE habiliments of woe no longer border on the ugly shapings prescribed for the last decade by fashion, (Sack-cloth and ashes do (not bring quicker solace,)) for grief is not a question of unbecomingness at all in dress as the fallacy formerly existed.

Fashion rules here as in other realms and we've carefully considered requirements of both, (first and..... (second mourning,)) paying special attention to widow's weeds and proper mourning for the young. We're showing some masterpieces of foreign importations, in exclusive designs in fashionable mourning hats from (Mangin-Maurice, Camille, (Roger.....)) Josse, Caroline Reboux, Deffontaine (and.. (others)) with whom you're familiar.

The Marie Stuart bonnet has proved so becoming (that widows prefer its quaint (shaping to any other.....)) the coronet being its main feature. Correct developments are in crepe.

The Charlotte Corday turban (with its characteristic coronet of (plaited crepe or knife plaitings.)) is becoming to both youthful and elderly faces.

There's the new Envelope turban (with its distinguishing (left side roll.....)) and a trim little turban, from Josse, of plain peau de soie, (which is eminently (a mourning fabric,)) quilled in elaborate leaf design. There is also a new Shepherdess design, for younger faces. A crepe continental turban (severely (plain...)) is excellent for traveling and street service. Mourning Veils and Hats executed to your order on short notice.

THE cry of the hour (in dress (goods..)) is for the new leather shades. Russet color—it must be in one of the new browns (and there is such an (unceasing demand for it)) that we're selling it just as fast as the manufacturers can send it.

Paris pointed to the coming rage for this new color (way in advance (of the season...)), and anticipating the demand for it, which has now arrived, (in a..... (veritable frenzy)) we fortified ourselves accordingly and made enormous (and..... (inexhaustible)) preparations so as to satisfy our patrons.

We have promptly and satisfactorily met the call for brown, for we've collected for the inspection of womankind the finest products of Paris, (Germany, (England)) and choicest domestic weaves.

Whether for street, (the luxurious (carriage wrap)), or for the formal At Home, the leather colors dominate.

Hints as to fashionable petticoats

NEXT in importance to the gown comes the silk petticoat (which must (be described)) in all its sumptuousness.

Two-toned glace taffetas in all of the fashionable colors are for street and general utility. The Scotch plaids in brilliant clan combinations (trimmed with (plain ruchings)) are ultra stylish for immediate wear. For evening service nothing is daintier and prettier than the Pompadour brocades showing gay bouquets of roses or violets, or garlands.

Ruches of lace (and Vandykes (set in,.....)) produce truly beautiful results. Messaline is generously used for petticoats, especially if the gown be of diaphanous texture.

American Beauty red, cerise and coral are eminently in style, (followed by..... (reseda green and)) glace brown. Black petticoats are made elaborate with black and white lace insets.

The Wanamaker Store.

Store Closes at 5:30 P. M.

For Forty-three Years We've Been Clothing Men and Boys

That's a long experience; and it has been national, as well as local to these two great American cities.

We have learned thoroughly how men of good taste desire their clothing made. We plan to meet broadly the wishes of all men, so that when an extreme of style appears, we put it in stock for the men who like extreme things; but we continue to take care of the conservative men in the most ample manner.

The foremost virtue of Wanamaker Clothing, is that every fabric shown is of absolutely pure wool. There is never any risk as to the fabric, you buy in this store, in clothing for either boys or men. The cloth in the lowest-priced suit as well as the finest, will, when the acid test is applied, boil down until the last thread is gone. There is no background or intermingling of cotton threads in any Wanamaker fabric,

This insures continued shapeliness of the garment, and the absolutely fast qualities of the colors.

There are other stores who claim that they buy their clothing from the same source as WANAMAKER'S, hence, their clothing must be the same; and while this is true as to the purchaser, it dosen't make the clothing the same at all; for the clothing made for WANAMAKER'S, even in the same factory, is distinguished by more careful work in every way,

Inside staying in regular suits of the factory, that other stores sell, may be a small piece of stiff canvas, sufficient to hold a pocket in place. In Wanamaker Suits, supposed to be the same, the garments will be stayed over an area three or four times as great, with a very much larger piece of linen which is not as stiff, but is more permanent by reason of its better quality and larger size; making the garments more as the custom tailor would make them.

Then the Wanamaker collars will probably be hand-made throughout, instead of having a few stitches caught by hand and the rest done by machinery.

Manufacturers have always complained of the demands which we make for special work. They are always compelled to put special hands on the making of Wanamaker clothing, because it has to be made in a different way; but the Wanamaker clothing business has always been so vast that manufacturers comply rather than have us take the business elsewhere.

Wanamaker Ready-made Clothing is the nearest approach to custom-made clothing that is known to ready-made. It is simply because of overwhelming qualities of excellence that this Men's Clothing business up on the Second floor, has assumed such large proportions right here in the midst of the best clothing stores in America.

The Clothing Store has had many disadvantages of location to overcome, but it has made it so well worth a man's while to hunt it up, that the business grows continuously season after season. Many men who would have nothing to do with ordinary ready-made clothing will find that they can save five to fifteen dollars on their business suits, without sacrificing the quality or good looks that they have been accustomed to in the past by going to good tailors. That is because Wanamaker clothing is so different.

The man who pays a fancy price to a tailor to get a smart and handsome Prince Albert coat or a perfect-fitting full dress suit made, will be very much surprised when he sees the splendid clothing one-half the money he has previously paid, will buy at WANAMAKER'S. This is because we have the very best tailoring skill applied to the making of the dress suits that are here ready-made. Then we carry stocks so complete in the assortment of sizes and proportions, that we can fit outright practically every man who comes to us. When a man has any little eccentricities of figure, we do with him, with these suits, exactly what a custom tailor does when he has his "try-on"; we adjust the garment to his figure just as carefully and correctly as the tailor would do it.

If you have never become familiar with Wanamaker Clothing it is due to yourself, both as to the matter of being well dressed and the most reasonable cost, to take occasion to became acquainted with the clothing we are selling this Fall.

Wanamaker Clothing for Boys is made in the same superior way as for men.

Every fabric, in every suit and in every pair of trousers, is all-wool to the last thread of the cloth. Every suit is made from special WANAMAKER specifications that are better than the standard of the manufacturers.

After exhaustive expert comparison, we are able to say positively that Wanamaker Clothing for Boys will average one to two dollars' worth better than you will find elsewhere. The greatest virtue in Wanamaker Clothing for Boys, however, is in the originality and good taste with which the suits are made. We not only have the usual styles as they come from the manufacturers, but we have many most attractive designs that are exclusively our own, which all parents who are proud of their boys will appreciate.

The Door Is Open In China

There is another full week of opportunity for the buying of China, Cut Glass and Bric-a-Brac. This is true in a pretty generous way, and we propose to have splendid offerings for every day until the very end of the month. But as the time draws close to an end, naturally the variety lessens. Every day the door closes on a great many splendid opportunities, where lots are closed out entirely.

This has been one of the best sales we have ever conducted, not only because it has gone ahead of last year's sales records, but because of the desirable qualities of the wares we have been offering. Again and again we have heard enthusiastic housekeepers exclaim over such unusual beauty in bargain goods. But it is not composed of "bargain goods." Everything has been carefully gathered, and almost the entire collection is composed of goods newly and specially made, in shapes and decorations of our own selection.

Naturally today is better than tomorrow, and each day will be better than the succeeding one until the sale ends, for artistic housekeepers to pick up pretty things for their own use, or for gifts for their friends. Great quantities of holiday gifts of a most desirable sort are being picked out, while this opportunity is here to buy these artistic wares at one-third to one-half below what they will cost you when it gets nearer to Christmas time:

ARMIES PREPARING TO FIGHT FOR MINES

JAPANESE ARMY WEAKENED?

Russians Again Hear That Troops Have Been Sent from Manchuria to Reinforce the Besiegers of Port Arthur.

The situation here continues quiet.

It is stated by Russian spies that Marquis Oyama has detached a considerable force to co-operate with the army before Port Arthur.

The Russians have taken many Chunchuses prisoners, among them being found a number of Chinese regular soldiers.

The weather has turned suddenly cold. The supply of uniforms is inadequate, and the soldiers are being supplied with Chinese padded overcoats, which are being bought in large quantities.

Chinese have brought into Mukden ten soldiers who it was thought were either killed or captured at Liao-Yang. They had been rescued and cared for by natives, who fed them and brought them into the Russian lines. The Chinese had refused payment from the men, but they were suitably rewarded by the officers of the latters' regiment.

A surgeon of one of the Siberian regiments, who was captured at Liao-Yang, has arrived here. The Japanese found him tending the wounded. They treated him well, entertained him at a concert in the famous Liao-Yang Summer Garden, and offered him a position as surgeon in the Japanese Army. Finding that he preferred his own regiment, the Japanese goodnaturedly escorted him to the lines and allowed him to return to Mukden.

Capt. Shubert and four Buriat Cossacks have returned from a long scouting expedition south of the Japanese main army. The Captain brings important information regarding the Japanese locations and movements, and says active operations in this vicinity will probably develop within a few days. Capt. Shubert experienced great kindness at the hands of the Chinese, who fed him and his men and offered to disguise them in Chinese clothing. This, however, was not necessary as the party eluded the Japanese pickets, passing within a few yards of one and reaching the Russian lines in safety.

GEN. KUROKI'S HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD, Sept. 17, via Fu-San, Sept. 22.—The Russians are reconnoitering along the Japanese front with a large force of cavalry, supported by guns.

With three guns they appeared yesterday evening within 6,000 yards of Yen-Tai station and threw a few shells at the station. They continued the cannonading at intervals all to-day.

The Russian force on the Mukden road extends from Shuli-Ho, eight miles north of Yen-Tai, to Tsao-tai-Tsu, five miles northeast.

ST. PETERSBURG, Friday, Sept. 23.—The Japanese advance toward Mukden continues slowly, according to information received by the authorities here. Both official reports and press dispatches place Marquis Oyama's advance guard thirty miles south of Mukden.

The Japanese will probably have to reckon before they attack Mukden with a stubborn defense of the Fu-Shun Mines, where the next important fight is expected to occur. The War Office does not expect a battle at Fu-Shun until after a series of rear-guard engagements.

Gen. Kuropatkin announces that the Japanese army at Bentsiaputze is beginning to advance northward. The outposts yesterday tried to capture Kaoutou Pass, commanding the road to Fu-Shun. The Russians are offering a stubborn resistance, which is likely to retard decisive operations.

Kuropatkin has placed strong forces astride the Mukden and Fu-Shun Roads to Bentsiaputze. The Russians are also holding all the passes of the Da range, eastward of Bentsiaputze.

According to the best information, Marquis Oyama has three armies concentrated south and southeast of Mukden, a fourth corps, consisting of two divisions, composed of men drafted from the armies of Gens. Kuroki, Nodzu, and Oku, being detached to Dziantchan and thence sending out flanking columns northward and northeastward, with the object of protecting Oyama's right and at the same time driving in the Russian outposts.

A detachment under Gen. Rennenkampff, while reconnoitring on Wednesday, lost two officers and nine men killed and three officers and twenty-three men wounded.

OKU'S REPORT ON BATTLE.

Japanese General Says Kuropatkin Meant to Hold Liao-Yang.

TOKIO, Sept. 22.—Gen. Oku has written an extended report of the operations preceding the capture of Liao-Yang.

In concluding it he expresses the opinion that Gen. Kuropatkin had determined to hold Liao-Yang, his plan being first to attack and defeat Gen. Kuroki and then to assail the Japanese centre and left armies.

Gen. Oku declares that the stubborn resistance of the Russians at Liao-Yang proves that their retreat was not prearranged.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 22.—The General Staff has issued a revised list of the Russian casualties at Liao-Yang, showing that 1,810 men were killed; that 10,811 were wounded, and that 1,212 were left on the field.

Fifty-four regimental officers were killed and 252 were wounded. Two Generals were killed and three wounded. Five officers were left on the field.

RUSSIAN SHIP REFUSES TO GO.

Authorities at Canary Islands Want the Terek to Depart.

LAS PALMAS, Canary Islands, Sept. 22.—The Russian cruiser Terek, which has been stopping British vessels in the vicinity of Gibraltar, commenced coaling here yesterday, but, on orders received to-day from Madrid, she was forbidden to continue coaling and was ordered to leave here during the morning.

Her commander replied that he was unable to put to sea owing to the Terek's engines needing repairs.

The vessel was, however, forbidden to take on board any more coal, or any water or stores.

REFUSED A BIG RUSSIAN OFFER.

Captain Could Have Had $25,000 if He Took the Askold's Crew Home.

MANILA, Sept. 22.—Capt. R. Colledani of the Austrian steamer Austria, which has arrived here from Shanghai, says $25,000 was offered to him to transport the crew and twenty-six officers of the Russian cruiser Askold from Shanghai to Russia.

The Japanese Consul at Shanghai warned the Captain that if he did this he would run the danger of being held up or even sunk by Japanese warships, and the offer consequently was declined.

PORT ARTHUR SHORT OF COAL.

German Ship, with Cargo, Thought to Bound Thither—Water Low, Too.

TSING-TAU, Sept. 22.—Several colliers have arrived here within the last ten days. It is believed that their cargoes are intended for Port Arthur.

The British collier Foxton Hall transferred her cargo of Cardiff coal to the German steamship Ericka, which vessel the local authorities would not allow to leave until they received an assurance that no attempt would be made to enter Port Arthur.

The Ericka sails at daylight, and Japan is given as her destination, but it is believed that she will ultimately make for Port Arthur, where the Russians are offering stupendous inducements for the delivery of coal. S. Davidson, an American merchant who had a Russian coal contract and was ordered to leave Port Arthur last Febé 15, is now at Tsing-Tau. He tells The Associated Press correspondent that when he left there the coal supply was very much depleted.

On account of the Russian warships having been compelled to keep up full steam day and night for nearly eight months and the enormous quantities of fuel required for the water-condensing plant, there must be a coal famine at Port Arthur now unless more coal has arrived.

The Japanese recently cut off the water, and since then, it is supposed, the garrison has had to depend upon the condenser. If, however, a coal famine prevails the town must be getting water from impure wells.

TOKIO, Sept. 22.—While official confirmation is lacking, it seems certain that the Japanese possess a fort on another height westward of Etse-Shan, which they carried by desperate assaults, and which they have since held despite all attempts by the Russians to recapture it.

Both these heights overlook Port Arthur, offering excellent gun positions, which materially weaken the Russian defense.

NO PASSPORT; MANY DAGGERS.

American Doctor Arrested in Russia as a Japanese Spy.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 22.—Dr. Herman Bayless of Los Angeles, formerly of Cincinnati, has written to his sister, Mrs. Helen Lansdowne, of Covington, from Vienna, telling her that he was arrested at Radonsk by Russian Secret Service officers and held for twenty-four hours under suspicion of being a Japanese spy.

With a companion Dr. Bayless took a short route from Northern Germany across a portion of Russia. Passports which had been arranged for did not arrive, but the travelers proceeded, expecting that the passports would be forwarded. In the meantime they were arrested and held until the papers were produced.

Dr. Bayles had a trunk full of daggers, having a fondness for collecting such arms. This trunk came very near getting him into trouble even after he had identified himself and his companion.

EUROPEAN LAWYERS MEET.

International Questions Discussed at Conference in Edinburgh.

EDINBURGH, Sept. 22.—A conference of the Institute of International Law, the members of which include the leading jurists of the world, commenced here to-day under the Presidency of Lord Reay. Many well-known European lawyers were present. The proceedings, which were private, were conducted in French.

The principal subjects to be discussed are arbitration treaties and their proper interpretation, international conventions, the position of foreigners in the military service of belligerents, and declarations of war and neutrality.

Sir Thomas Barclay, Vice President of the International Law Association, one of those attending the conference, said the consideration of the question of neutrality alone would probably occupy the Institute for four or five years.

At the banquet of the Institute of International Law this evening, Lord Rosebery, toasting the foreign delegates, dwelt upon the importance of questions of international law. He said it would be foolish to ignore the fact that there was supposed to be some rivalry between Great Britain and Russia, but he was convinced that there was room in Asia for both powers, and when that was recognized by both it would be the better for the world's peace.

DIDN'T CAUSE STAKE BURNING.

Eastland Freed on Motion of Senator McLuarin—Reggins Acquitted.

INDIANOLA, Miss., Sept. 22.—The trial of C. C. Eastland for the murder of Luther Holbert and his wife by causing them to be burned at the stake has suddenly ended. After the evidence was all in Senator McLaurin made a motion for peremptory instructions to the jury for the discharge of the prisoner on the ground that not a scintilla of evidence had been introduced tending to prove that Eastland had been in any way a party to the crime.

The Judges granted the motion and the big crowd applauded.

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., Sept. 22.—Thomas M. Riggins was acquitted to-night of the charge of murder in the first degree in connection with the lynching of Horace Maples. The prosecution in to-day's trial produced no convincing evidence connecting the defendant with the mob.

WOUNDS ODESSA POLICE CHIEF.

Would-Be Assassin First Shoots At and Then Stabs M. Neidgardt.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 22.—In Odessa this morning, while Chief of Police Neidgardt, in company with Prince Obolensky, his assistant, was inspecting some new Government buildings in the Boulevard Nicholas, near the Pushkin monument, a young man wearing a blue blouse fired a revolver from a distance of six paces at M. Neidgardt.

The bullet did not strike the Chief of Police, and the would-be assassin was about to fire again, when he was seized by Prince Obolensky.

The man's weapon fell to the ground and a desperate struggle ensued, in the course of which M. Neidgardt was wounded in the hand with a dagger.

The assailant was secured and placed in custody. He refuses to give his name or any account of himself.

HUNGARY BARS MORMONISM.

Appeal Against the Expulsion of Two Missionaries Fails.

VIENNA, Sept. 22.—The Hungarian Minister of the Interior has rendered a decision prohibiting Mormon propaganda within Hungary upon the ground that such a movement is undesirable both from the standpoints of State policy and religion.

The immediate occasion of the decision was the expulsion of two Mormon missionaries, Franklin Pingree and William Wetzel, who came from Salt Lake City to Temesvar eighteen months ago and attempted to organize a Mormon community among Hungarians who had formerly resided in Utah.

The two missionaries were promptly expelled, whereupon their Hungarian friends appealed to the Minister of the Interior, the result being the present decision.

TREATY WITH TIBET MAY FAIL.

Russia Believes That Her Protest to China Has Been Effective.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 22.—The Russian protest against the Anglo-Tibetan treaty has been presented at Peking. M. Lessar, the Russian Minister, is understood to have called the attention of the Chinese Foreign Board to the fact that China would abandon her suzerainty over Tibet if she ratified the treaty, thus creating a British protectorate.

The Foreign Office here has not yet received M. Lessar's report, but a dispatch from Peking announcing that China is not willing to ratify the treaty is believed to be the direct outcome of Russia's protest.

The Associated Press learns that Russia's representations to Great Britain in respect to Tibet are based on the apparent difference in the assurances given to Count Benkendorff, the Russian Ambassador to Great Britain, on June 2 and the published terms of the Anglo-Tibetan treaty. The assurances, which were incorporated in a formal memorandum, stated specifically that Great Britain would not maintain a military occupation of Tibet, would not establish a protectorate over the region, and would respect the integrity of China.

Information which Russia has obtained from Chinese sources establishes the fact that the published version of the treaty is practically correctt, and Russia contends that the treaty is a violation of the British assurances. It is said that Article IX. is so sweeping as to make British authority in Tibet practically displace that of China.

Great Britain asserts that the Chumbi Valley is not really part of Tibet, though subject to its jurisdiction, and that she has no intention permanetnly to hold it. The Russian objection, therefore, is based principally on Article IX.

It is not expected in diplomatic quarters that the incident will precipitate grave complications, as Russia's interest in Tibet is to a large extent academic. But it is important from her point of view that Great Britain shall not have such control over Chinese territory as practically to enable her to dictate what shall and shall not be done in respect to dealings with foreign nations or their citizens.

Germans Take Up New Mexican Loan.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Sept. 22.—The Dresdner Bank, in conjunction with the Schaffhausen Bank Union, has taken up the new Mexican 5 per cent. gold loan for the benefit of the Tehuantepec National Railway Company. The loan is issued with unlimited liability on the part of the Mexican Government. The interest and capital amount to 25,500,000 marks, ($6,069,000.)

KENTUCKY FEUD ARREST.

William Britton's Friends Fail to Take Him from Officers.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Sept. 22.—William Britton, arrested in Breathitt County last night, arrived here from Jackson to-night and was lodged in jail under indictment as an accomplice in the murder of James Cockrill. Curtis Jett, who is serving a life sentence for killing J. B. Marcum, is under sentence to be hanged as the principal in the murder of Cockrill.

The shots which killed Cockrill came from the top story of the Breathitt County Court House. Britton says he was on the ground floor at the time Cockrill was shot. Among the witnesses was Riley Coldiron, who swore positively that he saw Britton on the second floor of the Court House at the time Cockrill was shot.

Deputy Sheriff Terry and Coroner Bailey of Fayette County, who were given a bench warrant from that county for Britton, effected his arrest without trouble. Britton was taken completely by surprise at his home. Mrs. Britton quickly sent word to County Judge James Hargis, who is a cousin of Britton, asking that the Judge send men to release him. A posse of Britton's friends left Jackson to meet Deputy Terry, but the latter started with his prisoner in a buggy for Torrent, in Wolfe County, where he took a train for Lexington, and succeeded in eluding Britton's friends.

AMATEUR BURGLAR CAUGHT.

Williamsburg Grocery Clerk Couldn't Beat "Third Degree."

Henry Dodragge, a clerk in the grocery of Henry Mohrman at Bushwick Avenue and Decatur Street, Williamsburg, made a bungling job of a robbery which he had planned to carry out early yesterday morning.

He is twenty-two years old and came from Germany six months ago. Mohrman gave him employment, and by degrees Dodragge rose until he became head clerk. It was his duty to go to market each day, and for that purpose Mohrman gave him money the night before. Mohrman gave him $45 Wednesday night.

When Mohrman got down to his store yesterday morning he discovered that his clerk had not gone to market. He went to Dodragge's room, and found the young man apparently in a stupor. The room was in confusion, and it occurred to the grocer that perhaps robbers were there. He sent word to the Ralph Avenue Police Station, and then kept on shaking Dodragge in an effort to wake him up.

Dodragge finally seemed to come to, and he muttered that robbers had entered his room and chloroformed him. He said they stole Mohrman's $45, and also money of his own. Mohrman discovered that a trunk belonging to another clerk, William Hehr, also had been broken open and looted of $35.

When Capt. O'Reilly and Detective Reynolds reached the grocery they had Dodragge repeat the tale of robbery and then began an investigation. They found a back door of the grocery open, and came to the conclusion that the job had been done from the inside. Dodragge was put through the "third degree," and finally he broke down and confessed that he had concocted the story of robbery in order to get money.

SUICIDE WHILE NIECES SANG.

Maimed and Out of Work, He Shot Himself in Brother's Parlor.

George Vollmer, thirty-six years old, of 810 Macon Street, Brooklyn, shot and instantly killed himself yesterday morning in the parlor of his brother's home, where he lived, and where his two young nieces were playing on a piano and singing popular songs. Vollmer while employed in a factory a few months ago had his left hand caught in a machine and four fingers were amputated. On account of this affliction he was unable to find another job, and it made him melancholy. His morbid condition was increased by the thought that a young woman living in Indiana, of whom he was enamored, would probably not want to marry him.

CHANGES IN FOREIGN TRADE.

Increase in Our Exports of Manufactures and Decrease in Agricultural Exports.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—The increase in exports of manufactures and decrease in exports of agricultural products are discussed at length in a report of the chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor. For the first time in the history of the export trade of the United States manufactures exceeded $450,000,000, and agricultural products for the first time fell below 60 per cent. of the total domestic exports.

The total exports of domestic manufactures were $452,445,629, against $407,526,159 in 1903, and $433,851,756 in 1900, the highest record in early years. The total value of agricultural products exported was $853,685,367, against $873,322,882 in 1903 and $943,811,020 in 1901, when the highest total of agricultural exports was recorded.

The reduction in quantity of agricultural products exported occurs in all of three great groups which make up the bulk of the agricultural exports—breadstuffs, provisions and live animals, and cotton; but the chief reduction is in breadstuffs.

HOT STEEL BURNED FOOT OFF.

Boy Was Tending Rollers, and Bar Coiled Around His Ankle.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 22.—Daniel Gallagher, a thirteen-year-old boy, is lying at the point of death in an East Newark hospital as the result of having had his foot burned off in the mills of the Crucible Steel Company in that town yesterday. The little fellow lived next door to the steel works, and two years ago his infant brother was scalded to death by, it is said, a steam exhaust from the mill.

Young Gallagher was often among the men in the mills, and had become expert in taking the steel bars as they came like long bands of fire from the steel rollers. Yesterday he failed to catch the approaching end of one with his nippers, and in a twinkling it was encircling his ankle.

His shriek of pain called the force of men to his aid, but the white-hot bar tightened as it cooled, and by the time they had taken his writhing form from its coils his foot had been completely burned off.

DYNAMITE FOR STEEL MAN.

Fuse Burning on J. C. Maben's Steps in Birmingham.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 22.—A neighbor passing the residence of J. C. Maben, President of the Sloss-Sheffield Steel and Iron Company, to-day saw fire sputtering on the front steps and, making a hasty examination, found a pickle bottle with a burning fuse attached. The fire was extinguished, and an examination of the bottle showed that it contained a quantity of powdered dynamite, the bottle being sealed with a wooden stopper. There was enough dynamite in the bottle to wreck the building.

The man who found the bottle told the police that as he approached the residence he saw a man run away from the step. A strike of union miners is on at the mines of the Sloss-Sheffield Company, as well as at the mines of several other large corporations in this district. President Maben's company has been active in efforts to break the strike.

JORDAN, PERE, SHOT AT HIS DAUGHTER'S ADMIRER

Young Corbin Had Questioned Miss Elvira's Father's Veracity.

SHE WIELDED AN UMBRELLA

This Was at the Family Home in Elberon—Both Men Are Nursing Various Sore Places.

Princess Auersperg, her mother, Mrs. E. C. Hazard; J. V. Jordan and his daughter, Elvira, and John B. Corbin, a young man resident in New Britain, Conn., played the leading rôles in an affair last Sunday at the Elberon Hotel, Elberon, N. J., which, according to the account of Dr. Hermann C. Frauenthal of 146 West Seventy-second Street, was something of light comedy, although in the course of the proceedings Corbin was shot in the leg by the infuriated Jordan père, whose head was severely bumped in divers places.

It appears that for some time young Corbin has been paying marked attention to Miss Elvira Jordan, and, according to the narrative of Dr. Frauenthal, who was physician in extraordinary after the performance, Miss Elvira herself was not averse to receiving the attentions. Jordon père saw fit to cast a cloud upon the frequent meetings of his daughter and John B. Corbin.

When the latter called at the Elberon Hotel last Sunday he was informed that Miss Jordan had "gone to New York." Mr. Corbin was surprised, for he had spent each Sunday in Miss Elvira's company for some time. The young man from New Britain immediately drove to Shrewsbury to call upon a friend of his and of Miss Jordan's—the Princess Auersperg, who was staying there with her mother, Mrs. Hazard. There Mr. Corbin found Miss Elvira Jordan, "who had gone to New York," at the home of the Princess Auersperg.

The Princess called her carriage and all—including the mother of the Princess, Miss Elvira, and young Corbin—started for the Jordan home at Elberon. Arrived there all confronted Jordon père.

"We want to settle a small matter of veracity," Mr. Corbin is reported to have said.

What happened after that no one knows exactly. Dr. Herman C. Frauenthal, however, tells the result of the happenings. He was in his office on Sunday morning, when a man came rushing in and cried excitedly:

"Come over to the Elberon Hotel—quick! A man has been shot."

"I ran over to Mr. Jordan's place as quickly as I could," continued Dr. Frauenthal. "I found Mr. Jordan lying in bed with his shirt torn in several places and nursing a large lump on his head. He showed me the lump and just as I was about to examine it, Miss Elvira, his daughter, rushed into the room and cried:

"'Oh, doctor, don't stop here another minute. He isn't ill at all. Don't worry about him. Come quick! Poor Mr. Corbin has been shot.'

"I went with her," went on Dr. Frauenthal, "and found Corbin lying on a couch in another room, nursing his right leg.

"'Doctor,' said he, 'the old fellow has shot me in the leg.'

"I found on examination that a bullet had penetrated the right calf below the knee and buried itself in a tendon of the heel. For an hour I was engaged in probing for the bullet. When I had finished I fixed up the patient and went to see how Mr. Jordan was getting on.

"While I was looking over the lumps on Mr. Jordan's head he said to me:

"'Say, doctor, what can I do to relieve these lumps? You know I wouldn't feel half so bad about it if Corbin had not grabbed me by the arms, while my daughter pasted me over the head with an umbrella.'

"Miss Elvira came into the room at that minute and said something about 'Papa deserving it—that he told Mr. Corbin a lie!' That's all I know about the matter."

It is said that young Corbin was able to leave Elberon for his home in Connecticut, and that Jordan père and Jordan fille were reconciled.

MUST LOOK OUT FOR POLICE.

Motormen Ordered to be Careful About Men at Street Corners.

Police Commissioner McAdoo took advantage of the accident to Capt. Stephen O'Brien of the City Hall Station Wednesday night to make a request of President Vreeland of the New York City Railway Company, asking that motormen be instructed to look out for policemen doing duty on street car tracks while regulating traffic and caring for pedestrians. Mr. Vreeland's secretary informed Mr. McAdoo over the telephone that Mr. Vreeland would be pleased to issue such an order to motormen.

The Commissioner also denounced the action of automobilists, who after a certain hour at night make the Central Park drives, upper Seventh Avenue, and Broadway a race track. Two special bicycle policemen have been assigned to duty on Seventh Avenue and upper Broadway to break it up. Wednesday night the Commissioner saw a huge auto with two men and two women flash up Broadway at Forty-ninth Street at a rate of speed he fixed at thirty-five miles an hour or more.

INQUIRY INTO CAR EXPLOSION.

Many Deaf as a Result of the Concussion —Express Driver Held.

MELROSE, Mass., Sept. 22.—The authorities of the State, under the direction of Gen. J. H. Whitney of the State Police, started an inquiry to-day into the explosion on the Boston and Northern Street Railway here last evening, when an electric car bound to this city from Boston was blown up by dynamite and nine persons killed and forty injured. Of the injured, several are in a critical condition.

The more seriously injured are almost completely deaf as a result of the concussion when the car struck the dynamite, although physicians think it probable that in the majority of cases hearing will return.

During the day the body previously believed to be that of Miss Louise Teackles of Malden was identified as that of Miss Ethel Merrill of Melrose Highlands. Fenton, the express driver detained by the police in connection with the explosion, has been held on a charge of manslaughter under $1,000 for a hearing on Oct. 4.

VANDALS CUT ALTAR CLOTH.

Chipped Away Marble, Too, in a Spring Lake Church.

SPRING LAKE, N. J., Sept. 22.—Vandals have done serious damage to the beautiful St. Catherine's Roman Catholic Church, which was built here by Martin Maloney. The church, which for its size is probably the most costly in America, has heretofore been open to visitors.

Pieces have been chipped from the white Carrara marble and carried away. One or two of the vandals have even gone so far as to cut pieces from the beautiful white and gold altar cloth. Not long since the sexton on entering the building saw a man sitting near the altar smoking a cigarette.

New Yorker Robbed at Malone Fair.

Special to The New York Times.

MALONE, N. Y., Sept. 22.—John F. Arthur of the Woodward Hotel, Fifty-fifth Street and Broadway, New York, who is attending the fair here this week, had his pocket picked of $600 in a crush at the Howard House this noon. A detective is working on the case, but Mr. Arthur says he has small hope of recovering his money.

WOMAN DIES IN COURT PRISON.

Had Been Sentenced for Intoxication Half Hour Before.

Half an hour after she had been sentenced to five days on a charge of intoxication by Magistrate Flammer in the Yorkville Court yesterday afternoon, Eliza Smith, thirty-eight years old, who said she had no home, died in the court prison.

The woman was arrested by Patrolman Flynn of the East Twenty-second Street Station and arraigned with a batch of other prisoners. As the woman appeared to be still under the influence of liquor Magistrate Flammer sentenced her, and Flynn started to take her away. She wrenched herself free and squatted on the floor of the court room.

"I won't go with you," she cried.

The court officers gathered about and three of them assisted Flynn to pick her up. She was then carried bodily down stairs into the pen. About fifteen minutes later Keeper Mountain was passing when he noticed that the woman was very pale and asked her if she was ill. He got her a glass of water she asked for, and Acting Warden Lynch telephoned for Dr. Frank A. McGuire, the court physician. When Dr. McGuire arrived she was dead. When asked to make a diagnosis of the case he said:

"That is up to the Coroner. The woman was dead when I arrived. I suppose she died from alcoholism, but that is only my private opinion."

"Do you think she was in condition to be taken to court?"

"I don't think she was, but that is not up to me."

Coroner Scholer said that an autopsy would be performed on the woman's body.

LAY ARREST TO POLITICS.

Bondsmen Protest That Bayonne Collector's Books Were Altered.

Cyrillus Robinson, the aged collector of city revenue of Bayonne, who was arrested on complaint of Mayor Thomas Brady on a charge of embezzling $9,000 of the city's funds, yesterday gave $10,000 bail for the Grand Jury. It is said that the total shortage of Mr. Robinson's accounts amounts to $24,000.

Mayor Brady announced yesterday that Mr. Robinson had placed a piece of property for which he was at one time offered $35,000 at the disposal of the city to reimburse it. Mayor Brady also claimed Mr. Robinson had admitted being guilty.

The other side of the story is different. Mr. Robinson denies his guilt, and his bondsmen say they will stick by him and fight the case, one of them going so far as to charge that Mr. Robinson's books were altered for political purposes while the collector was away on his vacation. George Carragan, President of the Bayonne Bank, and one of the collector's bondsmen, said yesterday:

"There is a lot of politics in this, and nobody believes Mr. Robinson would do a dishonest act."

Dr. Alexander Dallas, another bondsman, expressed confidence in Mr. Robinson, and went on to say: "We will stick to Mr. Robinson to the last ditch. The other side is already shaking in their shoes. We'll shake them some more before we are through. When we were summoned to the City Hall after Mr. Robinson had been recalled from his vacation and accused I told Mayor Brady, after I glanced through the books, that I thought it was a put-up job. He made no reply. I asked him if any one but a fool would think like that, meaning the work on the books.

"Mr. Rose, the expert accountant, went over those books three times and found nothing wrong. Then after Mr. Robinson had been away some days the books are gone over a fourth time and the alleged shortages are discovered."

The third bondsman is former Judge Thomas F. Noonan, City Attorney of Bayonne. He is at present on his vacation. Mr. Robinson reiterated yesterday that there would be interesting developments when the case came to trial.

HIS FALL FATHOMED MYSTERY.

Policeman Chased Boys Over Fence and Tumbled Into Their Cave.

Boys stealthily climbing, one at a time, over a fence into a vacant lot in One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Street, between Eighth and St. Nicholas Avenues, attracted the attention of Policeman Moore of the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station yesterday afternoon, and when six had gone over, he followed. There wasn't a boy to be seen, although the lot on every other side was shut in by dead walls of buildings.

He walked about pondering the mystery, when the ground gave way beneath him, and he fell through the roof of a cave upon an improvised table, at which the lads were feasting on bonfine-cooked vegetables. The lads, whose aged ranged from eleven to fourteen years, pleaded at the station house that they had excavated the cave because they had read in a story book about some other boys who had one. They denied all knowledge of certain door knobs and eatables which, the police say, have recently disappeared from store and house fronts in the neighborhood. All were held on charges of disorderly conduct.

GIFT TO THE CITY BANK CLUB.

James Stillman Sends Check for $10,000 to the General Fund.

The National City Bank Club, which was recently organized by clerks of that bank for mutual benefit and instruction, has received a check for $10,000 from James Stillman, President of the bank, as a contribution toward its general fund. The check was presented at a meeting held Wednesday night, at which addresses were made by several of the officers of the bank who are honorary members.

It is stated that regular meetings will be held at which lectures will be given by experts on suitable topics relating to matters of banking and finance generally. When a wag in Wall Street heard of this he remarked that it might be interesting if the club could engage Thomas W. Lawson.

KITTY BECK SEEKS DIVORCE.

Court Astonished That Husband Earning $700 a Week Is Not Wanted.

Catherine Trumbull, the actress, who is known on the stage as Kitty Beck, applied to Justice Gildersleeve yesterday, in the Supreme Court, for an order to compel her husband, Ollie Mack Trumbull, to pay to her $100 a week alimony and $1,000 counsel fees pending the result of her action for absolute divorce. Ollie Mack Trumbull is now with the "English Daisy Company," playing in a Harlem theatre.

In the argument on the motion for counsel fees the statement was made that Trumbull was earning a salary of $700 a week.

"Is it possible," said Justice Gildersleeve, "that you have found any one earning $700 a week whose wife wants a divorce from him?"

"Well, it's true," said Mrs. Trumbull's counsel. Decision was reserved.

Lafayette L. Fawcett Ill.

Lafayette L. Fawcett, Chairman of the Kings County Republican General Committee, and President of the Invincible Club, is seriously ill. Mr. Fawcett was taken with hemorrhages at his office in Liberty Street, Manhattan, on Wednesday afternoon, and was removed to his home in a cab. His condition improved somewhat yesterday afternoon, and he was taken to Sullivan County for a rest.

Ferryboat Suicide, Perhaps.

The body of a drowned woman, which was identified last night as that of Mrs. Mary Burns, thirty-four years old, of 217 Hoyt Street, Brooklyn, was found in the water at the foot of Harrison Street, that borough, yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Burns had been missing from her home since last Saturday. On Sunday night a woman whose general description answered to that of Mrs. Burns threw herself into the river from the deck of a boat of the South Ferry line while in midstream, and was lost.

COLD SNAP BREAKS RECORDS.

Damage Everywhere to Fruit and Crops —Coal Supply Menaced.

BOSTON, Sept. 22.—Under the influence of a chilling north wind the thermometer dropped this morning to 35, the lowest point recorded in September, with one exception, since the Weather Bureau was opened here in 1871.

At Northfield, Vt., the mercury dropped to 26, the lowest official temperature reached in New England. The Weather Bureau gave warning of frosts so that farmers took means to prevent damage from the cold.

At Summit House, Mount Washington, N. H., the thermometer fell to 11 above zero last night. Snow fell and all the peaks are covered this morning. There was a magnificent frost display.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Sept. 22.—There was a heavy frost in the Chemung Valley last night and all September cold weather records were broken. At Saratoga the thermometer to-day registered 20 degrees above zero. Around Middletown much damage was done to crops and fruit.

PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 22.—The first frost of the season proved to be a killing one and late vegetables were ruined. A rough estimate by leading canned goods packers indicate that the damage to Maine crops will amount to several hundred thousand dollars. This is the third year that the corn canning industry has been practically ruined by early frosts.

ANNAPOLIS, N. S., Sept. 22.—Reports received from points throughout the Annapolis valley apple-growing district state that the recent high winds and frosts have heavily damaged the crop. A conservative estimate places the loss at nearly 25 per cent.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 22.—This was the coldest September day on record in Philadelphia according to the Weather Bureau officials. At 6 A. M. the official thermometer recorded 40 degrees above zero.

At Pottsville the temperature dropped below the freezing point. Operators at the anthracite collieries say that premature cold weather will cause an additional consumption of half a million tons weekly and dangerously lower the present surplus of coal on hand.

TOSSED PETS FROM WINDOWS.

Women in Blazing House Showered Street with Cats and Dogs.

A cry of "fire" in the neighborhood of Thirtieth Street near Broadway last night and the clanging of fire bells as engines responded to an alarm from an apartment house on the upper side of the street, just off Broadway, brought out strange sights. The music in the Haymarket across the street was suddenly stilled in the middle of a waltz, and men and women scrambled over one another in their excitement to get out. The cry which had been started outside was taken up inside, and nobody stopped to see whether there was a fire or not, but went pell mell through the street door, knocking the veteran ticket taker from his seat.

The firemen found the blaze in a room on the third floor of the apartment house. The fire was insignificant, and the smoke was not dense, but the trouble was with the occupants of the house. Some of the women hung out of the windows, ready to let go, while the crowd standing below shouted to them to go back. Others, however, stifled their fears of personal danger and rushed through their apartments looking for pets.

Here a woman appeared at a window bearing in her arms a tiny dog which she hugged, kissed, and then dropped to the pavement. Over there a woman kept her self-possession until she had lowered her parrot's cage by a clotheslines. Another fell half way out of the window, and would have fallen to the street had not a fireman rushed up quickly on a scaling ladder and pushed her back. Cats, dogs, birds, and even a pair of white mice were dropped to the pavement before the firemen were able to quiet the excited owners. When the firemen got through the policemen had an inning, for it was then that the hunt for pets began. Some of them were smashed beyond recognition, but the women made enough fuss over the live ones. The police had to separate two blondes who fought over a pug, while there was a hair-pulling match near by over a big black cat.

THIEVES FOLLOWED BOAST.

MacFaddens Rejoiced They'd Been Thirty-two Years Without Burglars.

After receiving the felicitations of their friends on the culmination of thirty-two years of wedded life, during which time neither sickness, fire, nor burglars has disturbed their serenity, Mr. and Mrs. William H. MacFadden of 27 East One Hundred and Thirteenth Street were chloroformed and their home ransacked by thieves. The anniversary was on Friday last, and friends of the old couple gathered at the house and made merry until 1 o'clock. Mr. and Mrs. MacFadden and their only son, William, had retired, and the lights were extinguished about 2 o'clock. About 5 o'clock Mr. MacFadden awoke with a choking sensation. A pungent odor of chloroform filled the room, and when the lights were turned on it was found that the flat had been robbed. Mr. MacFadden's watch and $50 in money were gone, while all of the presents and silverware given them the night before by their guests were gone. MacFadden went to call his son and found that he also had been drugged and that his clothes and watch, with $23 had been taken.

BRIDGE FALLS; TWO KILLED.

Many Others Hurt by Collapse of New Arkansas Structure.

VINITA, Ark., Sept. 22.—The east pier of a steel tool bridge, being erected over Grand River at Carry's Ferry, ten miles each of Afton, fell at noon, killing two men, fatally injuring three, and injuring twenty-one others, some of whom suffered broken limbs. The dead are Thomas Browning and Henry Becker. The names of the other are not obtainable to-night.

A messenger from the scene states that 100 men were at work at the time, and the pier collapsed with no warning, owing to faulty construction of the foundation. The bridge was of steel, on stone piers, and was to connect the east end of the Cherokee Nation with Vinita, and to take the place of the ferry between Afton and Grove.

CLAIMS GIRL'S BODY.

A Mr. Bishop Buries Young Woman Who Died in Alcoholic Ward.

The body of Ethel Bishop, who died last Monday in the woman's alcoholic ward in Bellevue Hospital, where she had been registered as a daughter of Mrs. Nina Pryor of North Thirteenth Street, Philadelphia, was removed from the Morgue yesterday and buried in a newly purchased plot in Cedar Grove Cemetery at Flushing.

Her body was removed in an undertaker's wagon. On the seat beside the driver sat the man who is said to have purchased the burial plot and to have paid the funeral expenses. He gave the name of Bishop, without further specification.

On Sept. 11 the young woman, who said she was Mrs. Ethel Bishop, was taken to Bellevue from a hotel at 301 East Twenty-fifth Street. She said she lived at that address with her husband.

According to Mrs. Anna Dowling, housekeeper of the Twenty-fifth Street place, Mrs. Bishop went there on Labor Day, appearing to be ill. After a few days Mr. Bishop called in a physician, but she continued to become weaker, and finally was removed to Bellevue. Her body was unclaimed until yesterday.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 22.—Inquiry at 1,417 North Thirteenth Street resulted in Mrs. Pryor sending down word that no information concerning her daughter would be given out. She resides with her son-in-law, John Sherman, and is the widow of Thomas Pryor. Mrs. Pryor went to New York to-night.

She had her driver follow the wagon, and as it was passing the headquarters of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, at Twenty-sixth Street, she called Special Officer Reagan of the society, who made the arrest.

BROKE SKULL IN CAB SMASH.

Despite Injuries Man Refuses to be Taken to Hospital.

The woman was not hurt, nor was the driver.

The man and woman first gave their names as Mr. and Mrs. Leslie of 146 West Sixty-fourth Street, but they said a moment later they were Mr. and Mrs. Desmond. Dr. Bailey of Bellevue dressed the man's injury and advised him to get into the ambulance and be taken to the hospital. The man refused. His wife called a cab, and they got in and were driven away.

BROOKLYN IN LEAD TWICE

Champion Pittsburgs Drop Back Into Third Place—Off Day for the Americans.

The New York National League team scored its one hundredth victory yesterday and won the championship. Although having sixteen more games to play it cannot lose the prize if defeated in all. The local team won the first game of a double-header with the Cincinnatis at the Polo Grounds yesterday, but lost the second game, with Wiltse pitching, in one of the most uninteresting contests decided on the local field this year. The defeat played havoc with Wiltse's record, who had won twelve consecutive games. All the teams in the National League played double-headers, and Brooklyn was the only team to win twice, the champion Pittsburgs being the sufferers. No games were played in the American League. New Yorks Win with McGinnity Pitching, but Lose with Wiltse.

With the championship practically assured the New Yorks played in poor form in both games of the double-header with the Cincinnatians yesterday, and although the local team scored their one hundredth victory by taking the first game, it was by suffrance of the visitors, for of the seven runs scored not one was earned. McGinnity was hit hard in two innings, two home runs, a double and a single producing three earned runs. One of the features of this contest was the reappearance of "Jim" O'Rourke in a New York Club uniform. Probably fifteen years have gone by since the "Orator" was last seen in the old New York team, and time has dealt kindly with him. He appears to be as vigorous and strong as ever, and received the "Iron Man's" delivery admirably. He was charged with an error, the failure to hold an easily thrown ball by McGann to catch a man attempting to score. He was four times at the bat, scored a run after reaching first base on a wild throw by Steinfeldt, and in the fifth inning made a good hit to centre field, but was left on first base.

A fumble by Steinfeldt, a base on balls, McGinnity's long fly to centre field, and two singles enabled the New Yorks to score three runs in the second inning, and after two were out in the fourth, Steinfeldt's wild throw, three singles and a base on balls gave the local men four more runs. In the fifth inning one of the Cincinnatis batted out of his regular place and struck out. It was Corcoran's time at the bat, and he was declared out, Kellum receiving another chance. The visitors made their first run in the fifth on Odwell's force hit, Devlin's fumble, and Mertes's dropped fly ball. A home run by Seymour, followed by a two-bagger by Dolan, gave them another run in the seventh, and Huggins's single and Corcoran's home run two in the eighth. Odwell's catch of McGann's fly ball in the eighth inning was one of the most brilliant seen on the local grounds this year.

Wiltse and Walker were pitted against each other in the second game, with Woodruff taking Huggins's place at second base for Cincinnati. Although Walker was very wild at times, Donlin and McGann were the only New Yorkers to hit him with any great effect. The fielding was wretched on both sides, and Wiltse aided materially in losing the game. Donlin's hit for four bases to right field gave the New Yorks their first run, a wild pitch and two singles their second, and McGann's double and an out the third. Cincinnati scored in only one inning, and eleven men went to the bat. A home run, two doubles, and a single were made, Wiltse gave two men bases on balls, and his failure to hold a thrown ball at first base allowed two men to tally. The scores:

BROOKLYN WINS TWICE.

The Brooklyns played almost perfect baseball yesterday and the result was they captured two games from the champion Pittsburgs, the first by a score of 2 to 0 and the second by a score of 3 to 1 in seven innings. Scanlon's pitching was an enigma to the Pittsburgs in the first game, McCormick being the only player to hit him safely. Lynch, the former Brown University player, was also effective, the Brooklyns getting but five hits. The only runs of the game were scored in the first inning by a couple of hits and an error. With Camnitz and Durham as the opposing pitchers in the second game, the batting also was very light. Durham was the steadier of the two, and with a few timely hits the Brooklyns were enabled to score a victory. Scores of the games:

CHICAGO AND QUAKERS QUIT EVEN

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 22.—Chicago and Philadelphia each won a game to-day by small scores. Hits were scarce in the first contest, Wicker, for Chicago, being particularly effective. The locals bunched their hits in the third inning of the second game, scoring four runs. The game was called in the seventh inning owing to darkness. Attendance, 1,353. The scores.

BOSTON AND ST. LOUIS EACH WINS

BOSTON, Sept. 22.—Both games here to-day were closely played, Boston winning the first, 3 to 2, and St. Louis taking the second, 4 to 2. Willis was at his best in the earlier contest and struck out twelve batsmen. McGinley, a New England League recruit, pitched the second game for St. Louis. Although effective he lacked control, owing to his nervousness. Boston's misplays, however, and Wilhelm's bases on balls gave St. Louis the game at an early stage. Scores:

NEW SPEED RECORDS BY AUTOMOBILE BOATS

W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Steers His Mercedes VI. to Victory.

LEADS FOR CHALLENGE CUP

Fastest Actual Time Made by Vingt-Et-Un, Running More Than Twenty-seven Statute Miles Per Hour.

William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., with his newest automobile boat, the Mercedes VI., won the first of the series of three races, yesterday, for the Challenge Cup offered for auto-boat competition through the American Power Boat Association. The race took place off the Columbia Yacht Club, foot of Eighty-sixth Street and the North River, and was run over a thirty-knot course going up the Hudson to a point near Piermont and return.

Mr. Vanderbilt's victory was only one of the interesting incidents of the race, for all auto-boat speed records were broken, in so far as they have ever been made in this country. Mr. Vanderbilt's boat made the high record of 25.397 statute miles per hour, but this was beaten by the Vingt-et-Un II., steered by C. M. Hamilton, which made the unlooked-for average of 27.236 statute miles per hour. The Speedway also made over 25 miles per hour.

The race was run on the handicap allowances of the American Power Boat Association, based on the horse power and the length of the boat. The Vingt-et-Un has twenty more horse power than Mr. Vanderbilt's craft, and had to allow the Mercedes VI. over twenty minutes. She only picked up a trifle over five minutes, her elapsed time for the thirty knots being 1:15:57, while the Mercedes VI. did 1:21:30.

As a motor-boat contest, it was the largest and most satisfactory ever held in this country. Ten of the fastest boats that have been built started, and all but one finished, that exception being the Challenger, which raced for the Harmsworth Cup in England. Proctor Smith was at the wheel, but before the start a pin dropped out of the thrust bearing, and after going over the line the big 119 horse power Challenger turned back. The boats, with their ratings in order of handicap allowances, were:

Boat and Club.	Horse Power.	Water Line. Feet.	Rating.
Josephine, Jamaica Bay	39.08	20.11	.53.40
Marcirene II., Cape May	34.40	34.50	54.25
Flip, Hartford	38.09	34.18	65.10
Shooting Star, Manhasset	24.07	37.08	65.55
Mercedes, VI., American	39.52	39.97	65.70
Macaroni, Atlantic	40.38	31.11	68.10
Mercedes, U. S. A., Rhode Island	42.20	31.11	72.30
Speedway, Columbia	64.45	39.35	73.84
Vingt-et Un II., Chippewa Bay	59.72	38.10	79.35
Challenger, Audubon	119.44	39.62	88.35

The boats started in the order as given above. Vanderbilt, steering his own boat, was the fifth away, and he lost only twelve seconds in getting across the line after the gun was fired. An engineer was with him. The boat fairly flew up the river, throwing the water from her bow in great waves of spray, and her speed made her a popular favorite at once. The Macaroni, the new boat recently built in Boston and equipped with an Italian motor, followed Vanderbilt about four minutes after. C. H. Tangeman was at the wheel, and she dashed by the clubhouse at a fast pace. The Speedway, that was partially blown up a few days ago when her owner, C. L. Seabury was out on the Hudson for a trial spin, had been perfectly repaired, and as the sole representative of the Columbia Club was regarded with favor by the members of the home organization.

After the start of the Challenger, the last boat away, and her immediate return, there was a wait of less than an hour, when a swiftly moving form was suddenly descried well up the river rapidly approaching the club. The committeemen hastily got their watches out, and the gun was made ready to go off as soon as the first boat to finish crossed the line.

"It's Vanderbilt's boat," shouted the crowd of enthusiasts as they pressed forward on the dock to greet the winner. Vanderbilt's slim form was faintly made out standing at the wheel with a cloud of spray flying in front of him. On came the puffing automobile craft, and as he came around to the float the clubmen rushed down to give him a hearty ovation. Vanderbilt naturally was pleased with his victory, but said he went half a mile above the stake boat where the homeward turn was made before discovering his mistake. The stake boat failed to anchor at the proper mark, thus making a thirty-knot course, instead of the prescribed one of thirty-two knots.

The Macaroni was the second boat to finish. Then came the Speedway, immediately followed by H. L. Bowden's United States Mercedes. The Vingt et Un II., which was the ninth boat to start, finished fifth. The summary:

Boat. Owner.	Start.	Finish.	Elapsed Time.
Mercedes VI., W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.	3:33:06	4:54:35	1:21:30
Macaroni, C. H. Tangeman	3:37:22	5:05:43	1:28:21
Mercedes, U. S. A., H. B. Bowden	3:44:12	5:08:54	1:24:42
Vingt-et-Un II., W. S. Kilmer	3:54:00	5:09:57	1:15:57
Shooting Star, H. A. Lozier	3:32:48	5:13:07	1:40:19
Flip, C. D. Holmes	3:32:00	5:19:26	1:47:26
Challenger, Smith & Mabley	4:04:17	Did not finish.

The second race will be held to-day over the same course. By the point system, of allowing 1 point for each boat completing the course and 1 point for every defeated boat, the Mercedes VI., scores 10 points, the Macaroni 9, and the others 1 point less in rotation, the challenger losing her point for not finishing.

EGAN PLAYS WINNING GOLF.

National Champion Reaches Semi-Final in Olympic Tournament.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 22.—The semi-final of the Olympian golf championship will be played to-morrow by George S. Lyon of Toronto, Canada; F. C. Newton of Seattle, B. F. McKinnie of St. Louis, and the National champion, H. Chandler Egan of Exmoor. Each of these golfers won his match in the third round to-day.

Lyon beat A. B. Lambert of Glen Echo, and the Canadian had a lead of three holes at the ninth hole, and eventually won by 5 up and 4 to play. Newton defeated Mason E. Phelps of Midlothian by 2 up and 1 to play in a splendid match. Newton had a lead of one hole at the ninth green in the morning, which he lost later, and Phelps wound up the morning play two up on his Pacific Coast opponent. The match was tied at the twenty-eighth hole by Phelps sending a ball into the ditch, and Newton then won the match.

Burt McKinnie's victory by 4 up and 3 to play over "Ned" Sawyer of Wheaton removed another Chicagoan from the race. Egan had a surprise in H. W. Allen. The latter played a wonderfully accurate long game in the morning, and was only 1 down to the champion. The latter gained no further advantage on his young rival until the third green was reached in the afternoon, when, by holing a ten-foot put, he led by 2. Winning the twenty-third and twenty-seventh holes, Egan assumed a command lead of four holes and held it to the end.

In the play-off for the cup for the low qualifying score honor Ralph McKittrick defeated his loyal rival, Stuart Stickney, by two strokes in eighteen holes. Each made 163 on Monday.

HARNESS RACING AT MINEOLA.

James Butler's Hetty G. Lowers Track Record to 2:07 in Exhibition.

MINEOLA, L. I., Sept. 22.—At the third day of the Fall Fair of the Queens-Nassau Agricultural Society held here to-day, James Butler's Hetty G., 2:04¾, with Thomas Murphy driving, went an exhibition mile and lowered the track record from 2:10¼ to 2:07. She did the quarter mile in 0:32¼, the half in 1:04, the three-quarters in 1:35, and the mile in 2:07. In the stake race for a purse of $500 Delilah won the first heat, but ran against the side of one of the sulkies, injuring her leg, in the second, and Murphy withdrew her from the race. The summary:

THE NEW MORALITY.

Because D. CADY HERRICK continued his activities in Albany politics after he had been elected a Judge of the Supreme Court, certain moralists among us insist that an intelligent and virtuous electorate should so cast its votes on Nov. 8 that the scandals and corruptions of the Odell administration may be condoned and the plans of a conscienceless gang of tax-eaters to continue the same may be approved, ratified, and confirmed.

There is not a lumber thief in the Adirondacks who would not enthusiastically applaud such a doctrine of morality. There is not a Republican worker quartered upon the State by Gov. ODELL'S henchmen who would not fervently pray that the theories of these moralists may prevail. There is not a captain of tens or of fifties using a public institution of the State to fortify and make more effective the Republican organization who would not vehemently sustain and defend the new doctrine.

GEORGE W. ALDRIDGE would thrill with a deep and peculiar joy in every tissue and fibre of his being could he feel sure that the voters of the State, by rejecting D. CADY HERRICK on account of his omission to put aside politics when he became a Judge, would put within the reach of him and his hungry following the immeasurable possibilities of patronage and profit to be opened up when the one-hundred-and-one-million-dollar canal improvement is begun. At the establishment of such a system of political ethics Satan himself would fill the uttermost sooty caves of his celebrated place of abode with roars of inextinguishable laughter.

It is substituting etiquette for the Penal Code. It is punishing personal indiscretion and letting official malfeasance go free. It applies the lash to bad taste, and issues a charter to felony. In short, it is a doctrine that turns morality, religion, and ethics upside down, and makes ducks and drakes of things spiritual and temporal.

THE AMERICAN AUTOMOBILE.

Sir ALFRED HARMSWORTH in an interview printed in The Herald says that nothing seen by him during his present visit to this country surprised him more than the improvement and development of the American automobile. He has been at pains to examine them somewhat critically, and finds some of the domestic types fully equal to the best French and German machines, if not superior to either. He says:

> Indeed, I cannot understand the folly of Americans importing cars and paying such ridiculously high prices for them, when, as everybody knows, the larger portion of these exorbitant prices goes into the pockets of Paris middlemen of more than doubtful reputation. It may be as BARNUM said, that the American people want to be humbugged. That may be the reason for their paying such absurd prices for foreign machines.

This is interesting, as Sir ALFRED speaks as an expert on the subject of motor cars. The facts sustain his views, but perhaps he is mistaken in assuming that everybody knows them and that the willingness of many Americans to pay high prices for imported machines when they could buy as good or better machines of home manufacture for lower prices is because they find satisfaction in owning the more expensive constructions. As a matter of fact, not many Americans know much about automobiles as yet. But they are learning, and the more they know the less eager will they be to buy imported machines in competition with those made at home. There was a time when fine carriages were chiefly imported, and perhaps a few still are; but our lighter and generally better vehicles are now preferred by discriminating buyers, and we are considerable exporters of pleasure carriages of all kinds.

The development of the American automobile industry is a source of satisfaction. The motor vehicle has "come to stay," and as speed madness gives place to a reasonable desire for practical and durable machines, the popularity of the automobile will steadily increase. It is dangerous only when run imprudently or recklessly—less dangerous, indeed, than horses ever were or are ever likely to be. The growing respect of automobile owners for the laws regulating the speed of travel on highways will discourage dare-devil chauffeurs and establish confidence and sanity as their qualifications as completely as they have long been in the case of coachmen.

THE WARWICK OF PANAMA.

Everybody in any way well informed about Panama matters took off his hat to WILLIAM NELSON CROMWELL when the little republic was set up and our bargain with the Frenchmen sealed. Now comes Señor GABRIEL DUQUE, the editor of The Panama Star and Herald, with fresh bays for the maker of the new nation.

Mr. CROMWELL deserves all this and more. His success has been astonishing. Five years ago, and even in days much more recent, it has seemed that he had hardly a ghost of a show to save the assets of his French clients from complete obliteration. The American people favored the Nicaragua route. Congress favored that route, and said so in a bill. President MCKINLEY favored it. Apparently DE LESSEPS'S great ditch was doomed to remain uncompleted. The Frenchmen were in despair. The Panama Canal Commission reported against buying their property and rights for $109,000,000, and recommended the construction of the Nicaragua Canal. Mr. CROMWELL seemed to have lost his fight.

Then of a sudden fortune guided her flashing car to his side and took him aboard. The Frenchmen came down to $40,000,000; MARK HANNA lent his powerful aid to the Panama cause in a two days' speech in the Senate, the Canal Commission rendered a supplemental report recommending the choice of the Panama route, and the United States took an option. The Hay-Herran treaty was negotiated. Things looked bright for Mr. CROMWELL. Clouds gathered again, however, at Bogota, and when it became evident that the treaty would not be ratified by Colombia the future looked black indeed.

But WILLIAM NELSON CROMWELL is a man of force and resource. In the paths where he did his walking no grass grew. "Mr. CROMWELL offered me the Presidency of the republic," says Mr. DUQUE, "if I would raise a small force of men and declare a secession from Colombia. He also said that if Colombia attempted to land a force in Panama, the United States Government would send a force there and keep the Colombians out." Mr. DUQUE could not dally with a mere Presidency. He wanted to be a Chief of the Fire Department. "I know, however," he says, "that the United States Government was aware that the revolution was being brought about, and that the President had a force ready to go to Panama at once if the Colombians sent any force there."

As to the "readiness" of the United States force, why, everybody knows that our warships had their noses pointed toward the Isthmus before the revolution broke out, and were quite conveniently hard by when the marines were needed to protect the insurgents from the armed forces of the friendly nation with which they were in revolt. If the United States Government was not aware that the revolution was going to break out it was poorly informed. New Yorkers knew it long in advance.

Mr. CROMWELL created a new republic, he stood ready to "hand out" a Presidency. He kindled a roaring flame of life under the dead ribs of the old De Lesseps undertaking. He got $40,000,000 for his French clients, and we hope they gave him a rousing big fee. He deserved it, and report says he got it.

ANTHRACITE FOR LOCOMOTIVES.

The announcement that the management of the New Haven Railroad began yesterday the use of anthracite coal in place of bituminous in the engines of thirty passenger trains, and that as rapidly as fireboxes can be altered it will put its whole train service on anthracite, if true, is to be commended as an act of corporate wisdom which deserves a compliment. The Long Island Railroad might with advantage adopt the same intelligent policy. The greatest economy possible in the use of soft coal will not compensate for the loss of public favor therefrom resulting. No railroad is rich enough or strong enough or enjoys so well established a monopoly of the business it controls that it can afford to be indifferent to public opinion.

In the case of the New Haven Road it would have been wiser to adopt anthracite as an engine fuel under conditions less suggestive of compulsion than was found in the action of the authorities of Mount Vernon and other points along its line. This, however, was a matter of judgment. The fact remains that the management has decided to respect public opinion, and how this decision was reached is a matter of more concern to them than to the general public.

THE PROBLEM OF "FINAL DISPOSITION."

As in the matters of water and sewage, the intelligent consideration of the great problem of the final disposition of the city's refuse collections is likely to be postponed until it is too late to do the proper thing.

At present rubbish and ashes are taken to ten receiving piers on the Manhattan water front, and of these five receive also garbage. The West Forty-seventh Street dump stands in a class by itself in that there some effort has been made to improve on the old method of putting the rubbish directly into scows for transportation to land fills with the ashes. This movement is in the right direction, as paper, boxes, barrels, old mattresses, and the like make the worst possible filling, and it is years before land so made is firm enough to use for building. At Forty-seventh Street there is an impractical incinerating furnace for reducing this light rubbish to ash, the ideal filling material. The ashes from this dump, and the ashes, rubbish, and street sweepings from all others, are taken to some one of several available dumping grounds, as Riker's Island, Newark Meadows, out to sea in midwinter, and other places accessible to scows where filling is permitted.

The garbage is disposed of in quite another way. It is received by special scows belonging to the Sanitary Utilization Company, and taken to their plant on Barren Island, a tow of about twenty miles from the Battery. There it is subjected to a reduction treatment which extracts grease and gives a residue of "tankage." The reduction process has nowhere been commercially successful. It is possible only at points remote from centres of population. When the contract to take care of the garbage of Manhattan was drawn in 1896 it was expected it might be profitable, and the price agreed upon was an annual payment by the city of $90,000.

In 1901 the contracting company found itself in a position of such advantage that it refused to renew its contract for less than five years or for a less price for the garbage of Manhattan alone than $232,000 per annum. There was nothing else to do, and so the contract was drawn. There is now less than two years until this solemn farce is due to be repeated. The management of the Sanitary Utilization Company understands the value of silence, and its policy is to discourage discussion. When it again has the city in the position in which it can say: "These are our terms; take them or leave them," it is understood by those whose sources of information are good that the annual price for treating the garbage of Manhattan will be half a million dollars. For reducing the garbage of Manhattan, Brooklyn, and the Bronx the company is now receiving $437,000 per annum. Experience has warranted the conclusion that when the city is confronted with an emergency this can be doubled as well as not.

Commissioner WOODBURY is not at all indifferent to the gravity of his responsibility in connection with final disposition. It is a matter deserving the serious attention of the executive heads of the City Government.

Municipal experience points to incineration as the only satisfactory solution of the problem of final disposition of the entire city waste; but the practical incineration of some 8,000 tons of mixed material per day is a large undertaking, requiring a considerable investment in plant and much greater intelligence than is usually shown in municipal work designed by department subordinates and built by adventurous contractors on loose specifications. We have several unsuccessful incinerators of that kind now wastefully operated or idle in New York.

ANT OR WEEVIL.

There was cheerful optimism in the opinion of its owner that his dog was good for coons because it wasn't good for anything else. The animal had had an all-round trial and this much was proved beyond question. In like manner has been founded the entomological hope almost amounting to conviction that the Guatemalan ant must be good for potato bugs because it has been found against the boll weevil inert and not worth its salt—hardly worth its residuary formic acid.

This insidious and disappointing coleopter came on the scene with a great flourish of pincers, antennae, and legs, and unless the potato bug or some other injurious insect afflicting our agriculture opens a career for its destructive talents it will go off the stage in discredit. Another remedy for the boll weevil will have to be sought. As to the potato bug, its extirpation would be almost of equal importance with that of the former insect; but except the entomological enthusiasts before mentioned few persons have any immediate hope of such a thing, and the faith that any Central American or other ant is equal to the job is not like that which removes mountains, or even ant hills. But there is no objection to the experiment, the extirpatory insects being here, all charges on them paid out of some departmental fund instituted for such purposes; and though this is rather late in the potato season, when its decorating and devastating bug is not in its fullest flower, still to have the experiment tested, the sooner the slim and sinewy tropical multiped is loosed upon it the better.

THE VICE OF OVERFEEDING.

As was to have been expected, the tentative discussion of "the lunch habit" in these columns a few days ago has called out many assenting and dissenting opinions. Fortunately, it is a subject which will repay intelligent discussion. If any fact is established by observation and experience it is that as a people we are grossly overfed. Abundance his its disadvantages.

A large and steadily increasing number of men and women have reached or are reaching the conclusion that it is vastly more difficult to avoid eating a great deal too much than to get enough to eat. The late ABRAM S. HEWITT once ventured some remarks on this subject in a discussion of the "living wage," showing that one who needed or desired to could live for very much less than it cost the average wage earner to feed himself. For this he was much ridiculed by some and roundly abused by others. He was perfectly right; but unwelcome truth has ever been accounted heresy. Students of dietetics, of whom he was one by reason of an infirmity of digestion demanding the strictest self-denial in the matter of eating, are learning from beneficial experience that two meals a day are better than three. [illegible] of people [illegible] believe that a substantial midday meal is necessary to health and comfort, and that to go from breakfast to the customary dinner hour at 6:30 to 7 P. M. without eating would mean for them an impaired digestion, a lessened efficiency, faintness, an evening headache, and a bad night. Perhaps they are right as to the first effects to be expected from the sudden abandonment of a bad habit. It is the same with the opium or the cocaine habit.

The latest and most authoritative generalization on this important subject of food and feeding is that of Prof. RABAGLIATI, one of the most celebrated of living British gynecologists, physiologists, and general surgeons and a lifelong student of dietetics, in his work on the "Predisposing Causes of Disease," from which we quote as follows:

> Moderation is the only fixed and the only unfailing rule of living, and in the case of food supply to people living in towns I attempt to more or less define moderation (an indefinable thing, of course,) as lying between twelve and twenty-four ounces of ordinary diet of wholesome quality a day, taken preferably at two meals eight hours or so apart.

This at least comes on good authority. Dr. RABAGLIATI'S observations and experiments, which cover a wide range, show that very much less food than he thinks may be taken in moderation is ample to sustain a normal person in good health and full strength; whereas with more than he thinks admissible the functions of the body are sooner or later congested and the "starvation of overrepletion" manifests itself in various ways. As a physician he does not hesitate to say that but for overfeeding there would be little for his profession to do beyond easing the natural infirmities of old age and ministering to the accidentally wounded.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—One needs to be only the humblest of apprentice prophets to predict the storm of protest and denunciation that will soon be raging over the suggestion made by a commission in the safe remoteness of the Philippines that the insular Government secure from Congress authority to take into its own hands the large opium trade of the islands and to carry on through its own official agents a business both wholesale and retail in a substance which by common consent is vastly more "soul-destroying" than Rum itself. The Commissioners in their report to Gov. WRIGHT do indeed show that they have given the opium problem as it exists in the Philippines prolonged and careful study, that they have thoroughly posted themselves as to all the plans that have been tried with varying degrees of success and failure in other parts of the East, and that nothing is further from their desire than that the Government should countenance or profit by a traffic the invariable consequences of which are wholly harmful. All that will be ignored in the coming attack upon the proposed monopoly, and it will receive instant, vociferous, and vehement condemnation as a compromise with evil and a weak and wicked admission that some evils are not to be conquered instantly or even at all by prohibitory statutes. The commission's plan includes every one of the details best calculated to infuriate people of the sort that brought about the abolition of the army canteen, and the fate of that institution is extremely likely to be the fate of the proposed opium monopoly. This presumably will be unfortunate in all its direct results, since it is quite certain that if such of the inhabitants of the Philippines as want opium cannot get it from well-controlled Government agencies they will get it from agencies under no control at all except that of dealers whose only object is to increase consumption. It is no more wise, however, to ignore the existence of what seems to be with a considerable part of our kind of people an instinctive antagonism toward any Governmental dealings with vice except attempts to destroy it root and branch than it is to ignore those elements of human nature which seem to make vice a permanency to be reckoned with like any other. And, when all's said and done, we are getting along—and upward—about as fast as the nations that lack this instinct and do not hesitate to make the best of bad businesses. The arguments of the opium board are obviously the expressions of sound and practical common sense, but their persuasive efficiency with those who are feared as potent to make and unmake Congressmen is extremely dubious, and even more dubious is the chance that the Congressmen will brave the dangers for them incidental to the establishment of an opium monopoly in Government hands.

—Of course the "P." whose letter we printed yesterday has not been alone in noting the fact that the young clerk arrested the other day for stealing many thousands of dollars from his employer was working for a wage of $7 a week, and certain is it, also, that others than "P." have pondered the possibility of a close relation between the boy's crime and his remuneration. Our correspondent's conclusion is that clerks in general are paid at rates unjustly proportioned to the value of their services, and so small as fully to explain, if not partly to excuse, their occasional yielding to their frequent opportunities for theft. There is something in this view—in special cases there is much in it—and not a few victims of such robberies should feel a heavy responsibility for the downfall of the honesty they so cruelly tempt. One must remember, however, that wages can hardly be adjusted with reference to the opportunities for theft, and that the occupant of a subordinate business position is supposed, often correctly, to be getting a training and experience that bring his meagre wage well within the bounds of decency. The theory of commerce is that salaries of $7 a week are for boys not yet wholly dependent on their own earnings, and that even the better clerkships are of the same quality, not positions in which a man is to marry, bring up a family, and provide for his old age, but merely the preparatory steps toward the adequate rewards earned by business energy and capacity. This theory bears extremely hard on innumerable clerks and bookkeepers, and it would be most unsafe to say that there are enough adequate rewards to "go round" among all those who possess business energy and capacity, but the practically unanswerable reply to those who fail to get one of them was hinted by our correspondent when he said, "We married people do not like to kick too much. We know there are thousands of young men who would throw us out and work for $10 a week and less." Work may be hard work, and it may be valuable work, but if it is work that many can do and are willing to do, satisfactorily in the vast majority of cases, that work is bound to be poorly paid work and to remain so until human nature becomes something very different from what it is now.

—And now it is The Norfolk Landmark that comes bouncing into the controversy about Southern accents and intonation that we were conducting so amiably with The Charlotte Chronicle, and airily declares that both of us are wrong. As usual in such cases of uninvited interference, the intruder has not taken the trouble to inform himself as to the exact subject in dispute. He thinks that it was on the relative harmoniousness of Northern and Southern speech—to which, as it happens, there had been only incidental reference by our North Carolina neighbor, and on which no opinion had been expressed by ourselves. What The Landmark says, however, is interesting enough. It is that "while the Southern pronunciation is generally softer than the Northern, the difference is greatly exaggerated," and that "most Northern people will admit that Southerners as a rule speak more musically; but we are not all thrushes down here, any more than they are all jays in the North." That is rather neatly worded—so neatly that we will refrain from seeing in The Landmark's mention of "jays" anything except a reminder that those birds have harsh voices.

SMOKE NUISANCE ON RIVERSIDE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you have space in your columns to call attention to one of the great nuisances that now affect a large residential section of this city? In your editorials you have recently called attention to the "smoke evil," but not to any particular case. The one I refer to is the worst that has ever dropped down on the residential part of our west side, so far as I can learn. It comes in great, sooty, black clouds of smoke from chimneys or stacks from across the Hudson, and whenever a wind blows from any quarter of the west or from the north, this smoke is deposited in a most disagreeable way over the west side from Riverside Drive east as far as Columbus Avenue or the Park, and from Ninety-fifth Street and above, south, as far as Seventy-sixth Street as the wind and atmospheric conditions distribute it. The smoke and soot are not only vile in color, but in odor, and have been strong and offensive enough at times to be noticed in the above section of the city even with the windows closed.

On Wednesday evening of this week residents in the dwellings and apartment houses in parts of the above west side district could not keep their upper west and northwest windows open, excepting with the greatest discomfort. The odor is of a greasy as well as of a sooty character. The establishment that floods a residential quarter with such dark, nasty clouds of smoke is a public nuisance. People will soon be induced to seek other dwelling places far outside of the above boundaries unless the nuisance is abated. You have frequently advocated forms of relief, and deprecated the use of soft coal. It is evident that unless the press comes to the rescue New York City will be given over to business and smoke and fearful nuisances, and the beautiful Riverside and West End and other homes here will be only a memory.

Where are the West Side Association and the State Board of Health, and the like? Cannot some one devise a means of smothering that manufacturing volcano that creates this smoke and soot and foul smell, and which lies on the bank of the Hudson across from about One Hundred and Fourth Street?

A LOVER OF THE WEST SIDE.

Discourtesy in a Flag Incident.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I was much surprised to see that the newspapers this morning gave much space to reporting an incident which one would suppose might better be left alone. I refer to the "raising of the British flag at Bergen Point." Can you wonder that your visitors get the impression that the American people are woefully narrow-minded in such matters? One has only to look back a short time, to July 4, when a similar incident occurred—Mr. Armstrong's flag being hauled down. Have any of the Second New Jersey volunteer veterans ever been to London and counted the Stars and Stripes banners that float there day by day? Surely, an occasion of this kind (the reception of a number of Englishmen) is the time for an act of courtesy such as floating the visitors' national banner, but when a mob of men behave in such a manner as you report, can you be surprised that your visitors' pleasant impressions of this great country are somewhat spoiled?

"ROBIN HOOD."
New York, Sept. 21, 1904.

How He Became "D." Cady Herrick.

From The Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

Daniel Cady was a great Western New York jurist. He was the father of Elizabeth Cady Stanton. Folks have confidently concluded that Jonathan Herrick named his son Daniel Cady after the Western New York jurist. That conclusion is as erroneous as it is natural. Young Herrick was baptized Cady Herrick. That pleased his mother. It did not please his father. The latter thought that Cady might be softened by fools into Katie—and the child was a big, bouncing boy. When that boy attained a few years Jonathan Herrick told him to write his name D. Cady Herrick. He said to him: "The D will only signify the letter of the alphabet for which it stands. If people choose to think that it stands for a name instead of a letter, they may. But as for you, write your name D. Cady Herrick, D to please me and Cady to please your mother. Then we'll both be represented." This explanation, so true and so simple as to be difficult of adoption, is absolutely correct. Judge Herrick is so stalwart in person and in character that the imputation of "parting his name in the middle" has never hurt him. He has none of the qualities that sometimes go with men who "part their names in the middle."

Misunderstood.

From The Commercial Tribune.

"The location is all right," said the prospective buyer, "but the lot isn't large enough to build a comfortable house on."

"Oh, I misunderstood you," replied the real estate agent. "I thought you were going to put [illegible]."

CONTRADICT PANAMA EDITOR.

Washington Officials Deny Reports of Friction Between Wallace and Davis.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—The statements yesterday in New York of Gabriel Duque, editor of The Panama Star and Herald, in regard to Engineer John F. Wallace, going to show that Mr. Wallace desires to usurp functions on the Isthmus not distinctly within his line of duty, were denied emphatically to-day at the Panama Canal Commission's office. John Seager, private secretary to Mr. Wallace, to-day said:

"There is absolutely no foundation for the charge that friction exists or has ever existed between Chief Engineer Wallace of the Canal Commission and Governor General Davis of the Panama Canal Zone I have never seen two men work more harmoniously together than Mr. Wallace and Gen. Davis."

Secretary Dominic I. Murphy of the Isthmian Canal Commission confirmed the statement made by Mr. Seager. Chief Engineer Wallace is in Chicago. He is not expected in Washington for some time.

William Nelson Cromwell of the law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell, and the attorney for the French Panama Canal Company, refused yesterday to discuss the statement of Gabriel Duque, the Panaman editor, who stated that Mr. Cromwell had brought about the revolution in Panama by the liberal use of money. To all newspaper men asking at Mr. Cromwell's office, at 49 Wall Street, for an interview a secretary replied that Mr. Cromwell had left word that he had nothing at all to say on the matter. Mr. Duque left yesterday for Washington.

FEDERAL LABOR INQUIRY.

Secretary Morton Investigating the Pay of Machinists.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—Secretary Morton has addressed letters to various large industrial companies throughout the country asking them for information about the pay their machinists receive, the classes into which they are divided, the amount of piecework done, the premium paid for overtime work, and other matters about the employment of the men of this trade.

The machinists at the navy yard at Washington have asked for increased pay, and the investigation by the Secretary is in the interest of this request.

People's Seaside Park Desirable.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I see by the papers that representatives of various organizations and a number of leading philanthropists, clergymen, and educationists are to appear before the Board of Estimate this week in support of what seems to be an almost unanimous movement to obtain a large area of ground equal in extent to our Central Park, on Rockaway Beach, for a people's seaside park and playground. Certainly this would be "a consummation devoutly to be wished." The movement on the part of many teachers to secure a part of the projected park for a Summer vacation playground for the especial benefit of the large class of pupils of our public schools who would otherwise be spending vacation time in the streets and seeking entertainment in undesirable quarters, cannot be too highly commended. Manual training, play, gymnastics, and athletics are the practical sources of physical education in the schools, and a properly equipped area in the proposed park would give unrivaled facilities for their enjoyment, where the air is absolutely pure and where there are miles of water front for either surf or still-water bathing.

SOUTHWICK.

THE DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE.

Peer of Any Governor.

From The Albany Argus, (Dem.)

To those who do not know him, it may be said that D. Cady Herrick is intellectually the peer of any Governor this State has had in recent years, and the superior of most of them. In advocating his nomination for Chief Judge, we called attention to the remarkable executive ability which he possesses; to this essential qualification Judge Herrick adds old-fashioned honesty and integrity, absolute fearlessness in the performance of public duty, and conspicuous independence. He has never worn any man's collar, and in the Executive chamber he will be Governor—every inch.

The Democratic Party has at once bestowed upon Judge Herrick a great honor, imposed upon him a great duty, and required of him a sacrifice. There is need of a man of his calibre to reform the crying abuses of Odellism, which are notorious, and some of which are presented to the people in the Democratic State platform. To be deemed worthy to serve the people and his party in such a crisis as now exists in State affairs is indeed a high honor.

Strong, Aggressive Nomination.

From The Saratoga Sun, (Dem.)

Judge Herrick is too strong a personality to be hastily considered. His selection was undoubtedly due to the general sentiment in favor of a strong, aggressive nomination, and one as little as possible associated with the lowering of the Democratic ideals from the standard set by Tilden and Cleveland.

Will Make a Good Governor.

From The Utica Press, (Ind.)

It is only fair to say that there might easily have been a worse nomination than Judge D. Cady Herrick of Albany. He is more than ordinarily a good politician. He has played the game and played it well, and for years been at the head of the Herrick faction, which has made things interesting in his city and county and won oftener than it has lost. As a Judge those who have tried cases before him say that he is an able jurist and that on the bench he has decided the cases before him on their merits and according to the law. He is capable of making a good Governor, if elected, and it will be a mistake to suppose that he will be weak in the campaign. Mr. Jerome would have secured more votes. It remains to be seen if Judge Herrick can secure enough.

None Stands So Well.

From The Boston Post, (Dem.)

The nomination of D. Cady Herrick as candidate for Governor is none the less satisfactory because it was brought about as a compromise.

In fact, it may be said that of the candidates most strongly urged as their first choice by the several factions none stands so well before the public as Judge Herrick. He holds high place in the judiciary of the State as a Justice of the Supreme Court, and his Democracy is that of Tilden, of Cleveland, of Parker. Senator Hill's nominating speech was a handsome tribute from one who has been counted among his opponents, and the convention made the choice unanimously.

A Very Able Man.

From The Philadelphia Record, (Dem.)

The night before the convention Grout's nomination was supposed to be a foregone conclusion. But although Grout was elected Controller of New York City by Tammany, he has quarreled with the organization, and in the interests of harmony the convention wisely went up the State for a candidate. But it went into Mr. Hill's own county, and, disregarding mere personal animosities, nominated a very able man who has been identified with the best Democracy, but is not the leader or the tool of any faction.

Helped Through the Phrase.

From The Philadelphia Press.

"Pardon me," said the seedy looking man, who was laboring over a letter in the hotel writing room, "but can you tell me how to spell 'temporarily'?"

"Certainly," replied his shrewd neighbor, giving the desired information, "and the other word is 'a-s-s-i-n-a-t-e-d.'"

NEW HAVEN ROAD UPHELD.

Does Not Need to Put On Additional Trains to New Rochelle.

ALBANY, Sept. 22.—The State Railroad Commission has decided against certain citizens of New Rochelle, who objected to a lack of passenger service between that place and Forty-second Street, New York, between 9:30 P. M. and 12:02 A. M. The board says:

"In view of the report of the Inspector of this board and owing to the congested conditions of the tunnel and the difficulties in the way of dispatching additional trains because of the changes and improvements at the Grand Central station, the board has come to the conclusion that it is not warranted in recommending an increase in the number of trains on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, believing that putting on of additional trains at this time would increase the probability of accidents."

The State Railroad Commission's decision has caused great dissatisfaction, not to say indignation, among residents at New Rochelle and other places along the Sound, who are accustomed to leave the Grand Central station for their homes late at night. The most inconvenience is felt by members of the theatrical profession, many of whom live in New Rochelle or beyond.

For several years past local trains have left New York at 10:30 and 11:30 o'clock. A few months ago the 10:30 train was discontinued, and subsequently the 11:30 train, thus requiring passengers for points along the Sound to wait until 12:02 before they could return.

It is said that the failure of the railroad company to run the 11:30 train will be a hard blow on theatre managers, as many theatregoers living along the line between this city and Stamford will not, as heretofore, patronize the metropolitan plays.

Why Bryanites Support Parker.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If your correspondent "The Hicksite," whose letter is published this morning, would take a few days off from his arduous labors of directing the campaign all by himself and think about it a little more, he would probably discover the reason why both Cleveland and Bryan are supporting Parker, though differing radically from one another on matters that are not at issue this year—just as they may patronize different schools of medicine or theology.

It is because they are broad enough to recognize—and my observation differs from that of "The Hicksite" as indicating that this is true of most of their followers—that to carry the principles that they do agree upon, and which are fortunately those upon which the popular vote is to be taken, neither wing can reasonably expect a blind subordination by the other of its views on the points where they do not agree. As to the few people like "The Hicksite," who cannot understand this sort of liberality, they had better drop out of the procession and let it go on without them.

E. J. SHRIVER

To the Editor of The New York Times:

No one who wishes well to the cause which Judge Parker represents, after a perusal of that letter, but will believe, and rejoice in the belief, that "The Hicksite's" attempts to win votes for Parker "have been limited," as he (or she) avers, if that letter be a fair specimen of the "attempts."

In the interest of harmony among all who would deplore the ratification by the American people at the polls of the conduct and policies of that singular creature, that pendulum betwixt Bombastes Furioso and Olly Gammon, who for three jocund years has played such fantastic tricks before high heaven as to make the angels weep, Bryanites, in the matter of party control, have tacitly consented to let "the tail wag the dog." But may I humbly suggest to "The Hicksite," and to all other equally discreet (?) friends of Judge Parker and his cause, the possible impolicy of the tail's agitating the superior part too violently—at least till after we have all voted? The Marriage Agent in Paris.

From The London Telegraph.

PARIS, Sept. 10.—The Paris Civil Tribunal seems likely to have to settle at an early date a curious claim for commission which is made by two commercial men in connection with a marriage they successfully arranged.

A Paris grain dealer, being desirous of marrying his son to a lady who should have a respectable fortune, entered into negotiations with the two agents, who declared they were ready to undertake the commission. Upon receiving formal instructions they got into communication with the vicar of one of the suburbs, and the priest was soon able to give them the name of a lady whose conditions of fortune appeared satisfactory. Before matters proceeded further the agents had a business interview with the gentleman for whom they were acting, with the result that he agreed to pay them a considerable sum as commission once the marriage had taken place.

In due course the marriage was solemnized, and the bride, as is usual in France, brought her husband a considerable money dot, which was paid over before the wedding. After the honeymoon was concluded the two agents appeared and demanded their commission, but their client refused to pay, declaring that the written promise which they held was obtained from him by unfair means. He even made a complaint to the police, but their inquiries did not support his statement and they declined to act. The agents have now decided to recover their money through a civil court, their debt, it is stated, being legally recoverable.

Like a Mediaeval Penance.

From The London Chronicle.

According to a Frankfort paper the Pope has brought about a reconciliation between the Prince Friedrich Schönburg-Waldenburg and the Princess Alice de Bourbon, from whom he was divorced. They were married by the Pope in Venice seven years ago, and he now proposes to remarry them when they have done penance. This is to take a form which smacks of the Middle Ages. The Prince and Princess will make a long pilgrimage on foot. They will wear sandals, go bareheaded, and live on bread and water in the meanest inns to be found on the road. Probably they will take the direction of Jerusalem. On the whole, the penance promises to excel in picturesque interest that of Henry II. for the murder of Becket, and other historical examples. But there seems to be some doubt whether the Frankfort paper is correctly informed.

STOESSEL.

William F. Kirk in Milwaukee Sentinel.

Grim old lion of the fortress, stalking
'round your lair,
Growling forth your fierce defiance to the foemen gath'ring there,
Though we may not breathe a prayer that success attend your arms,
In this land of Light and Freedom, far removed from war's alarms,
We are cheering for you, Stoessel, as you seek to stay the fall,
For a hero is a hero—that is all!

Dark and gory is the outlook, and you know
it all too well,
For Death's engines lurk beyond you, and around you crashes Hell,
Hope is going, blood is flowing, Sorrow comes on sable wing
Where the hordes of yellow hornets madden with their dying sting,
We are cheering for you, Stoessel—fight as long as you can crawl,
For a hero is a hero—that is all!

Hold the fort till dissolution; perish as we know you can,
With a haughty laugh your death song and a curse to greet Japan,
Though within be gaunt starvation and without a corpse-strewn field,
Terror cannot sway you, Stoessel; horrors cannot make you yield,
Honest tears [illegible] you,
[illegible] you shed [illegible] fall:
For a hero is a hero—that is all!

BURNED SLIP AT SEA TO MAKE A CONEY HOLIDAY

CAUGHT BY ARAB HORSEMAN

Coney Island, on the second night of her end-of-the-season Mardi Gras festival, had the greatest evening in all her history last evening. At least 150,000 visitors attended to share in the merrymaking. The only hitches occurred at the commencement of the grand parade. Twenty minutes after the appointed time neither the King nor the Queen of the carnival appeared. The King, in private life J. Ashley Hunton, was stopping at the Sea Beach Palace, while the Queen, Miss Florence Denham, has established her royal state at the Concourse Park Hotel.

His Majesty, according to programme, should have proceeded in state to the Concourse, and there join his royal consort. At the last moment he called up one of the waiting Prime Ministers and announced that he would be unable to come because of a lamentable occurrence.

"Somebody's pinched the royal pants," was the blunt announcement made by a page to a courtier when the word spread. It was learned that after watching a cake-walk in the Sea Beach Hotel Mr. Hunton went up to his room to dress for the part and discovered that not only the tights which he was to wear, but the crown jewels had been stolen.

Her Majesty, therefore, decided to go it alone. She made her appearance in a beautifully decorated landau drawn by two richly caparisoned white horses. Fireworks blazed in dazzling glory as she started for the head of the parade, and one vicious, hissing squib exploded between the horses' heads. Both bolted. The Queen shrieked and the royal coachman tugged at the lines and shouted, but to no purpose, and the horses went at full gallop up the Boulevard with every horseman in that part of the line in hot pursuit, among them rough riders, Indians, and many sorts of quaintly costumed riders.

Five Bedouin Arabs finally got the lead, and one of them, Hajid by name, grabbed the near horse's bridle and stopped the runaway, after it had gone nearly three-quarters of a mile toward Brooklyn. Miss Denham was badly frightened but unhurt, and discharged her part for the rest of the evening with truly royal grace and dignity.

The burning of a full rigged ship off shore and the rescue of her crew soon after nightfall was the opening event. The vessel, which had once been a 1,200-ton, three-masted craft, was towed out perhaps half a mile from shore, while the people crowded the whole length of the beach.

Signal rockets of distress called the life-saving crew to the shore. Soon a red glow appeared above her forecastle, showing her crew rushing frantically about her decks. Smoke rolled up, and there was a deafening explosion forward, scattering the fire to all parts of the hull, and soon great streamers of flame ran up her masts and shrouds, and her square rig, yards, and sails flashed out in a column of fire. Explosion followed explosion.

A gun boomed on the shore, the shot went true, and carried a line over the doomed vessel. Some were brought in with the breeches buoy, others with the life-boat, and finally the ship seemed to burn to the water's edge. The conflagration was in charge of Pain's fireworks people.

Returning to Surf Avenue, the throng found it illuminated as never before from one end to the other. Several of the hotels gave away fire sticks to all who passed. The parade was a repetition of that of the night before, save on a larger scale. Every show on the island turned its full force into the line; every animal on the island either marched or rode along in its cage.

The Fourteenth Regiment went down from Brooklyn in ten special cars and marched together with a detachment of bluejackets. Forty policemen, headed by Capt. Dooley, cleared the way for the marchers. There was a big business men's division, and Luna Park and Dreamland combined their firemen and engines in one great battalion. Advertising wagons distributed good things broadcast to the crowd. One threw out cigars and cold bottles of beer.

Where there had been one sausage wagon in line the night before, there were now half a dozen, converting five dogs into frankfurter links before the delighted eyes of the spectators. At least they saw the dogs go into the hopper and the sausages come out. An old-fashioned Coney Island basket party was shown on one float. At least fifty persons of all ages composed it, scrambling and fighting for the contents of the baskets. Grotesque human heads, ten feet high, with constantly moving features, walked along on their necks.

The carnival closes to-night with the apparent destruction of Coney Island by fire, a big masquerade at Dreamland, and another parade. During the day there will be reduced rates at the shows, and tickets will be sold for a small price admitting the holder to practically every entertainment on the Island.

REFUSAL NEARLY COST LIFE.

Girl Who Wouldn't Marry Slashed by Suitor with Razor.

When eighteen-year-old Rose Orcioli reached her home at 91 Mulberry Street from work last night she was met at the doorway by Nicoli Fusco of 72 Mott Street, who had been seeking her hand. He asked her again to marry him, but she refused him.

Fusco, so she told the hospital surgeons, then drew a razor and slashed her on the cheek and throat. Then he ran off. Her screams attracted the attention of Policeman Charles Strasser of the Elizabeth Street Station, who sent in a hurry call for an ambulance.

Surgeon Long took the girl to the Hudson Street Hospital, where it was said she would recover. The razor had missed being fatal by an eighth of an inch. Detectives are looking for Fusco.

CHILD DIES OF BURNS.

Mother Found Her Enveloped in Flames —Played with Matches.

Margaret Carey, five years old, was removed to the Bradford Street Hospital yesterday afternoon from her home, 136 Williams Avenue, East New York, having been fatally burned while playing with matches. Mrs Carey was on an upper floor when she heard the child's screams, and, running down stairs, found Margaret in the lower hall enveloped in flames. Although conscious when removed to the hospital, the child died at 7 o'clock last night, three hours after the accident.

MRS. MANSFIELD'S INJURIES.

Less Serious Than Supposed—Resting Easily.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Sept. 22.—Mrs. Richard Mansfield, who fell from her frightened saddle horse yesterday and was injured, was reported as being quite comfortable to-day. Her injuries prove to be less serious than were at first supposed.

An examination by a specialist showed that Mrs. Mansfield suffered only several severe bruises and shock. It was at first thought that her spine was badly wrenched, and Mr. Mansfield hurried here from New York on a special train, accompanied by a specialist.

IT WAS A "TA-RAN-CHOO-LER!"

Newark Negro's Awful Discovery in Bunch of Bananas.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 22.—A West Indian tarantula, boasting a spread of legs somewhat greater than the circumference of the average tea saucer, reached the fruit store of Joseph Ray, 10 Green Street, this afternoon in a consignment of bananas. Its presence was discovered when Mr. Ray undertook the separation of the banaas into the regulation "hands." As he worked "Tom" Johnson, his colored helper, took charge of the bananas and carried them into the store. "Tom" had just completed a trip when he noticed the unwelcome guest.

"Look out, Mr. Ray!" he shouted. "Dar's a hairy sumthin' hangin' on dat fruit dat 'pears to me is got no bizness there."

Mr. Ray did look out. He promptly dropped bananas, tarantula, and all to the pavement.

"It's a bunch er pizen with foots dat sting!" Tom yelled. "I knows him now. If he sticks a stinger in yer it's sudden death! It's a ta-ran-choo-ler!"

The tarantula had fallen into a pile of excelsior in the gutter, and when the flimsy stuff was set on fire the big bug got out and sped away toward Mulberry Street.

PLANS FOR THE OPERA SEASON.

Herr Conried's List of Singers Includes New Tenor and Baritone.

The Conried Metropolitan Opera Company issued yesterday the prospectus for the coming opera season. It tells all the singers that have been engaged by Mr. Conried and most of the operas that will be given.

Most of the singers are, of course, already well known here, but there are a few new ones. Notable among these is Francisco Nuibo, a tenor, from Paris. Mr. Conried heard him when he was abroad this Summer, and was immediately struck with his voice. Eugenio Giraldoni is a new baritone.

The first performance of the season will be on Nov. 21, with "Aida." "Gioconda" is apt to be the first novelty. "Norma" and "Lucrezia Borgia" will probably be revived. The most notable of other revivals will be "I Puritani," "Martha," and "Der Freischutz."

"Die Fledermaus" will be given for the first time in New York. Enrico Caruso, Mr. Conried announces, may sing in "Don Giovanni." The Wagner operas in the repertory, besides "Parsifal," are "Der Fliegender Hollander," "Lohengrin," "Der Meistersinger," "Tannhäuser," "Tristan und Isolde," "Das Rheingold," "Die Walküre," "Siegfried," and "Götterdämmerung."

Special performances of "Parsifal," besides the regular subscription performances, will be given during the season. The first will be on Thursday, Nov. 24, (Thanksgiving Day.)

The usual Sunday evening concerts at popular prices will again be given with the best singers in the company and orchestra assisting. Fraulein Froelich and Signora Enrichetta Varasi, the two premiere danseuses who were here last year, will be here again. Luigi Albertieri will have supervision of the ballet.

The orchestra will be under the direction of Arturo Vigna, Alfred Hertz, and Nahan Franko. Pietro Nepoti will have charge of the chorus.

The prices are as usual. They range from $60 for a grand tier box to $1 for a seat in the family circle. Subscribers are entitled to a rebate of 20 per cent. from the regular prices, except for grand tier and stall boxes.

NOVELLI COMING TO NEW YORK.

G. C. Tyler Will Also Bring Mme. Rejane Here in November.

George C. Tyler, head of the firm of Liebler & Co., returned from Europe yesterday on the Deutschland. He spent most of his time abroad automobiling and engaging actors and actresses.

"I crossed the Alps and the Apennines in my own car," said Mr. Tyler, "and didn't have an accident—went over 8,000 miles altogether. The thing I have been most interested in is the success Miss Eleanor Robson had in England. 'Merely Mary Ann' was received with great enthusiasm by the newspapers and the public. And now I have arranged with Mr. Frohman to cancel her booking in Chicago in November, so that she can stay at the Duke of York's until late in the year. She will return to this country to open in St. Louis Christmas week.

"Mme. Réjane will sail for New York on Oct. 8. Her New York opening will be at the Lyric Theatre on Nov. 7, and she will appear in 'La Parisienne,' 'La Passerelle,' 'Zaza,' 'La Robe Rouge,' and other Parisian successes.

"Novelli will be at the Lyric in January. He will bring his own company with him. I believe Novelli is the greatest actor alive, and I expect the American public to go wild over him. He will open here in 'Louis XI.,' and then follow it by 'Papa Lebonnard.'

"I have contracted with Hall Caine for his new play, 'The Prodigal Son.' Arthur Collins intends to produce this play at the Drury Lane Theatre in England, and is trying to get Forbes Robertson and H. B. Irving to create two leading rôles.

"I hope to bring over Eleanore Duse again next season. And I have a contract with an English actress. I'm not telling her name yet, but she is one of the best in the business."

SCORE OF "ETERNAL FEMININE"

Prof. Parker of Yale Writing Music for Margaret Anglin's Play.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 22.—The stage this year is to have the first dramatic score to be written by Prof. Horatio W. Parker, the composer and well-known head of the Yale Music School. Prof. Parker is now at work on twelve numbers and incidental music for "The Eternal Feminine," the new work Margaret Anglin is to appear in this year.

Prof. Parker was formerly concert organist at Trinity Church, Boston, and now has an organ in New York City, besides acting as leader of music at Yale University. His reputation was made with his "Hora Novissima."

NOTES OF THE THEATRES.

Patients at Bellevue and Roosevelt Hospitals are to be treated to musical comedy without leaving their cots. Manager Whitney of "The Isle of Spice" is going to send the entire company to Roosevelt Hospital at 1:30 o'clock some day before long. After singing "Peggy Brady" and "The Goo Goo Man," and one or two other songs, the company will leave there for Bellevue, arriving about 3 o'clock. After singing there the principals and chorus will disperse.

Miss Helen Royton has been engaged to play the part of Pee Chee San, the leading prima donna role in the Oriental comic opera by Harry B. Smith and Alfred E. Aarons. She was first brought into public attention by Augustin Daly, who noticed her when she sang in a Brooklyn choir.

Victor Herbert and his orchestra are expected to return to-day from Pittsburg. They will begin Sunday night concerts at the Majestic Theatre Oct. 9.

Miss Madge Lessing will sail for England to-morrow. Frank Curzon has engaged her to play the leading female role in "Sergeant Brue."

Eddie Foy announces that he has purchased a frog farm. "I'm going to stock the place with one thousand of the finest Michigan frogs," he said last night. "Within a year I expect to have 150,000 frogs of the best quality. I expect to train some of them for pets. I always have thought a nice, affectionate frog would be a good pet."

Reginald De Koven has finished the music for the new opera which Glen Hobert and W. A. Brady are to produce this season. De Wolf Hopper will appear in it.

CIGAR STAMP CONTEST NOW A POLITICAL ISSUE

Independent Cigar Men Said to Control 250,000 Votes.

ALL HERETOFORE REPUBLICAN

Hold Balance of Power in Eight Congressional Districts—President Must Choose Between Them and Trust.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—The contest over the proposed change of the customs stamp for imported cigars has become a political issue, and the Republican Administration will have to choose between the Tobacco Trust and the independent trade. The independents say they are in touch with 250,000 cigar manufacturers and dealers and cigar makers. The New York factories alone employ more than 10,000 workmen, who, because of the fact that the clear Havana industry has been built up under the McKinley-Dingley tariff, have heretofore been Republicans.

A canvass shows that the tobacco men hold the balance of power in eight Congressional districts. Representative Babcock, Chairman of the Congressional Committee, and Chairman Cortelyou of the National Committee, are fully informed on this point. The independents are also aware that the holding up of the printing of the new stamp was done by Acting Secretary Taylor, after an appeal on behalf of the Tobacco Trust had been made to President Roosevelt, it is understood through Senator Aldrich, Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate. The change had been made by Mr. Armstrong after consultation with and approval by Secretary Shaw and a revocation by Acting Secretary Taylor would be practically a reversal of his superior officer, Secretary Shaw. The independent tobacco men think Mr. Taylor would not dare to do this except at the direction of President Roosevelt.

The hearing on the proposed change of stamp will be held Saturday morning before Acting Secretary Taylor. The independent tobacco trade is thoroughly aroused over the prospect that the order making a change may be rescinded. The Tobacco Trust, on the other hand, is making a great effort to have the order revoked, and appealed from the Treasury Department to President Roosevelt, who directed Mr. Taylor to give a hearing to both sides to the controversy.

Each side is making preparations to present its case in the most elaborate form at the hearing. The Tobacco Trust will probably be represented by Messrs. Junius Parker and Josiah T. Wilcox, the general counsel and Secretary of the trust, respectively. The delegation of independents will include Simon Batt of New York, President of the Havana Cigar Manufacturing Association of the United States, and other representatives of this association; A. Bijur, the President, and other members of the National Cigar Dealers' Association of America, and others from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, representing all branches of the tobacco trade.

This matter has now gone far beyond a mere question of a change in the customs stamp. It is an out-and-out fight of the Independents against the trust. Since the establishment of the American Tobacco Company the independent manufacturers have never succeeded in defeating the trust on any issue before Congress or the departments until the order of Mr. Armstrong making the change in the customs stamp. Within the past few years the independent trade has been thoroughly organized, and this is the first test of strength between the allied independents and the Tobacco Trust.

If the independents win, it is expected that the moral effect upon the tobacco industry will be very great, as it will encourage the Independents to fight the trust more actively.

The independent manufacturers have asked for an audience with President Roosevelt Saturday, when they will lay their case before him if they are given an opportunity.

SEEKING "THE OPEN DOOR."

Phrase Puzzles Possible Librarians—Esopus, a Poem—Other Guesses.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 22.—It has been found through a civil service examination for public library clerks that the phrase "the open door" means many things to many minds.

"Eavesdropping, or carelessness," is one definition given by a candidate for a position. Others thought "the open door" meant:

The Salvation Army.
A place to enter and rest, with welcome.
Religion.
Field of literature.
A novel of the mystery type—might be a detective story.
Refers to labor and the hiring thereof.
The hereafter.
The emigration station in New York for receiving the poor of Europe.
Freedom of thought.
A church.
Suggests the idea of China being the ground for all nations to go in and take what they please.
Politics.
A magazine or periodical.

The candidates were asked also to explain the function of the French Academy. These are some of the guesses:

A fine art exhibit.
Men whose writings are approved by the French Government.
Education.
French school for young ladies.
A school in France where higher studies are taught, such as French.

Esopus, the name of Judge Parker, suggests these ideas to the would-be library clerks:

A historical building.
An ancient city.
The present home of the glorious standard bearer for the high office of President.
A Latin name.
A poem by Longfellow.
Greek mythology.

Tolstoy was severely handled. One candidate said the Russian writer "probably knows he would not be heard of if he were not extreme in his views." Another declares that Kipling writes a "lot of stuff that he gets a good price for."

BERNIER OFF FOR THE NORTH.

Canadian Explorer Plans to Drift Across Pole with Ice Packs.

SYDNEY, C. B., Sept. 22.—The steamship Arctic, with Capt. Bernier and the Canadian expedition under Major Moodie, sailed from this port to-day for Hudson Bay and the North. The party will remain three years. They will take formal possession of the arctic islands and will collect information and curios of various kinds. Capt. Bernier expects to make an attempt to reach the north pole in the arctic after completing the present trip.

Just before the Arctic sailed Capt. Bernier said that he intended to go up Bering Strait, and then drift across the pole in the ice packs, his plan being similar to that of Nansen, the Norwegian explorer. Major Moodie said the principal object of the Hudson Bay expedition is to enforce the observance of the Canadian laws at Hudson Bay and the arctic islands by all, including United States whalers and fishermen. In the party are ten of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police.

IN THE SHOPS.

There is no one for whom so much consideration is shown in the shops as the smoker. There is nothing he could imagine which is not made up for him, and there are many things he would never think of, but they are all more or less convenient. Here is a standard smoking outfit, which costs $6.75 and is quite different from anything in this line seen before. It is of Russian brass and has raised upon a standard well above the table receptacles for cigars, cigarettes, safety matches, and a little below, in the centre, a dish for ashes, with four places around the sides, upon which lighted cigars may be rested. The tray is removable. The set is useful and convenient, and more easily moved than the same number of pieces separate and upon a tray. For people who do not like brass there is the same thing nickeled.

There are all sorts and kinds of convenient small pieces for the smoker at moderate prices, very practical, made of nickel or nickel and crystal. One of these is for the card player. It is the individual ash receiver, a small, round dish of the nickel-plated white metal, with a little hollowed arm at one side to hold the lighted cigar, the end of this arm having a small support beneath, that there may be no danger of an upset. It costs 60 cents.

Another convenience in nickel is a hanging match safe for the safety matches. It costs 50 cents.

A low, round glass ash receiver, which has a removable top with nickeled bars for knocking off the ashes, costs $1.50.

Another low, round glass ash receiver, which has a safety match holder at one side and rests for two cigars, is also $1.50.

Very pretty is a match holder, which does away with the box in which the matches are bought. It is a little narrow dish or box of crystal, with hinged nickel cover. On the inside of this cover is a place to scratch both safety and ordinary matches. This costs $2.

A convenient piece in nickel is a traveling flask, which may be used for any of a number of purposes. The bottle will perhaps hold half a pint. It is in the shape of a woman's cologne bottle, and is in a nickel case with a large screw top, also of the metal. This will prevent breaking, and in case of the bottle leaking, the contents cannot escape. It costs only $1.75.

There are other articles for the smoker, as well as a great many articles for the desk, in one of the new combinations of metal which forms a soft-colored red bronze. The style of the decoration is in the art nouveau, charmingly graceful. Very pretty in these pieces are the paper cutters, one with an owl on the handle and another showing the graceful figure of a woman, which is seen so largely in the art nouveau decorations. These cost $1 each.

A pretty ash tray with an undulated edge and decorative figure in the centre costs only 35 cents.

Very pretty is a cigar lighter and burnt-match receiver. At the back of the small tray for the ashes stands the figure of an owl. The top of the owl's head raises and the little glass receptacle for the alcohol with the wick can be seen. There is a handle at the back for convenience in carrying, and the whole costs only $1.50.

A Sphinx head forms a large inkstand, in front of which is a good-sized tray for pens. It costs $3.15.

The rugged head of a man forms another inkstand, which also has a pen tray, and costs $3.75.

More elaborate than these, and very charming, is another inkstand, with a large tray and two female figures in relief, one at the foot of the inkstand and the other on the tray. It costs $8.50. A smaller tray and one figure, with inkstand at the back, costs $3.25.

In a smoker's set there is a tray with cigar, cigarette, and match holder, which costs $5.25.

JERSEY COURT WORRIED OVER FATAL DOG CASE

Evidence Not Clear as to How Many Dogs There Were.

TWO BOYS WERE BITTEN BADLY

If by the Same Dog, It Must Die—Otherwise Second Canine May Escape.

The dog of John Stapleton of Van Reipen Avenue, Jersey City, was again in court there yesterday, before Police Justice Manning. Just what dog was in trouble this time the Justice was not sure, and therefore he adjourned the case to investigate.

Yesterday's offending dog was a smooth-shaven, ugly collie, which bit little Harold McGrath, son of a neighbor of the Stapletons, so badly a day or two ago that the lad may die. The former offending dog some weeks ago attacked the son of Clerk Egan of the Hudson County Board of Freeholders, and was spared from death only on condition that it be sent away. This dog was a long-haired, ugly collie.

The father of the McGrath boy, Mr. Egan, and John Stapleton were all in court yesterday. Stapleton said that the dog now in trouble was not the dog that bit young Egan, and Mr. Egan and Mr. McGrath said that it was, the former adding that his son had died since the attack by the dog, and that he believed that the lad's death had been hastened by his injuries.

Then Stapleton declared that young McGrath was bitten while he was "hooking" peaches in a field, and that the attack was not in the highway. The Jersey law provides that the execution of a dog may be ordered if the animal attacks any person on a public highway. This puzzling situation, therefore, confronts Justice Manning:

If the smooth-shaven dog that bit young McGrath is the same dog that bit young Egan, he can order it shot on the basis of the former offense, irrespective of where the second was committed. If, however, the dog that bit young McGrath was not the one that bit young Egan, the animal has a legal right to live if the biting was not done in a public highway.

Justice Manning, therefore, directed that evidence be submitted as to the place of the attack.

SAUSAGES AVERTED ROBBERY.

Janitor Ate Them, Woke Up Thirsty, and Interrupted Burglars.

Frankfurter sausages indirectly saved the clothing stock of Smarlin & Borrowitz of 119 Canal Street from burglars early yesterday morning. They formed the Wednesday night supper of Yeffin Drudowsky, janitor of the tenement 50 Chrystie Street, adjoining in the rear, and he ate so many that he awoke with a burning thirst at 4 A. M. yesterday and sought the water faucet in the hall. There he saw a man staggering down stairs with a heavy load on his back. Worn-out mattresses are frequently disposed of by occupants of tenements by dropping them on deserted pavements.

"Throw it well out into the street," said Drudowsky.

"All right," came a cheery response through the darkness as Drudowsky again sought his couch.

But he could not sleep. He kept thinking about the man with the sack. Suspicion got the better of Drudowsky, and he again went out in the hallway and found that the man had dropped his burden and fled. It proved to be a canvas sack stuffed full of garments and bolts of cloth. Five more sacks, all filled, were found on the tenement stairs.

Morris Goldstein, who has a clothing store in the building, identified the property by the tags, and the police found that the robbers, of whom there seemed to have been two, had cut a hole through the roof of the Canal Street building and descended by a ladder wrenched from a near-by fire escape, thus avoiding setting off the burglar alarms with which the building is equipped. An axe, saw, crowbar, and jimmy were picked up near the hole. The establishment had been ransacked and the goods packed up had been selected according to their value. There was about $5,000 worth.

CITY COLLEGE'S RECORD YEAR.

Over 2,700 Students Enrolled—Two Additions to Faculty.

With an increase of 1,000 new pupils, the fifty-seventh academic year of the College of the City of New York was opened yesterday with informal exercises.

Dr. John Huston Finley, President of the college, welcomed the students back to their studies, and said: "I regret that the Summer vacation necessitates a blank in our educational work, and hope that in a few years we can undertake Summer courses that will fill in that time and give the advantages of such courses to large numbers to whom they would be of great benefit."

It is estimated by Dr. Finley that over 2,700 students will be enrolled this year, and he expects that the new college building, now in the course of construction at One Hundred and Fortieth Street, will be completed in time for use at the opening of the college year next Fall.

Two new professors have been added to the Faculty. Prof. Charles A. Downer, a graduate of the City College, and of Columbia University, has been appointed Professor of French, and Prof. Charles Baskerville, late of the University of North Carolina, and the discoverer of "carolinium" and "berzelium," two new elements in inorganic chemistry, has been appointed Professor of Chemistry.

UNIONIZE GUITAR AND BANJO.

Also Mandolin, and Players Hereafter Must Join Organization.

On account of the increasing tendency to employ guitar, banjo, and mandolin players as soloists in orchestras, the Musical Protective Union has decided that the players of these instruments are eligible to membership in the union.

The M. P. U. will endeavor to get these players into the organization, as, according to its members, the union men cannot play in orchestras with them without violating the union rules. It has been suggested that the M. P. U. organize a branch for members of college musical clubs, to avoid complications in the coming Winter season.

ODD FELLOWS BAR WOMEN.

Keep the Rebekahs Out of Grand Lodge —Color Line Stays.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22.—Amendments proposing that the barrier of sex be removed so that the Rebekahs might become representatives to the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows, and that the color line be extended so as to permit the admission of men who were partly Indian descent, were both defeated during to-day's session of the lodge. Two measures tending to reduce the term of office enjoyed by representatives of the Grand Lodge from two years to one also met with defeat.

The amendment providing that men who were only indirectly engaged in the liquor business might be admitted to the order was laid on the table [illegible]

'FATHER BILL' DALY FIRES COOK

Retreats Before Cloud of Platters, Cups and Saucers and Coal Scuttle.

A tale of how "Father Bill" Daly, the turf man, who for years has "bossed" jockeys and rough stable men and boys, met his Waterloo when he tackled his family cook was unfolded yesterday in the Bedford Avenue Municipal Court, Brooklyn. Mr. Daly was being sued for $20 for wages by Lizzie Boyce, a negress.

Some time ago "Father Bill" hired Lizzie, who, it appears, was meek and humble enough for the first few days, after the manner of cooks, and then began to assert herself, also after the manner of cooks. One fine morning Mrs. Daly went into the kitchen to tell Lizzie what to cook for breakfast.

"Mr. Daly would like some bacon and eggs," she said, sweetly.

Lizzie placed her arms akimbo and glared at Mrs. Daly.

"Oh, he want bacon an' aigs, do he?" she asked, sneeringly. "Well, Ah wanter say he don't git no bacon an' aigs, not dis mawnin', he don't. Ah's cooked some hash wif onions, Ah have, an' he eats dat or he don't eat nuffin. Ah guess Ah knows what ter cook fer breakfas, lady."

Mrs. Daly beat a retreat and told Mr. Daly there would be no bacon and eggs for breakfast, as Lizzie preferred hash. Mr. Daly was indignant.

"I'll fire her at once," he declared, striding into the kitchen. "Lizzie, your discharged," he announced to the cook.

Mrs. Daly says Lizzie casually reached for the handle of a saucepan, and "Father Bill" edged toward the door.

"I say you're discharged, Lizzie," he repeated.

"Ah guess not, son," said Lizzie, after a painful pause. "Mah month ain't up yet, an' Ah don't go 'fore den, honey. Yo' jes' take er mosey now or yer don't git no hash."

"I'm the boss here; you take your clothes and go," ordered Mr. Daly.

Just then Mrs. Daly says, things started coming "Father Bill's" way, a saucepan first, then a flock of meat platters, a cloud of cups and saucers, and finally a coal scuttle.

"I discharged her, all right," said "Father Bill" when he reached Mrs. Daly on the hop, skip, and jump.

Arrayed in her finest, and with her nose tilted high, Lizzie swept grandly out of the house that afternoon and did not return. She brought proceedings to recover her month's wages from Mr. Daly, and, despite the tale of his experience which was told she got judgment yesterday for $20.

RECALLS SILK FRAUDS.

Martin Cohen Retires from Rosenthal & Co.—Mendelsohn & Co. Reorganize.

It was learned yesterday that the firm of A. S. Rosenthal & Co., importers of silks, which figured as principal in the famous silk fraud trials, had been dissolved. The firm consisted of A. S. Rosenthal, now a fugitive in Europe, and Martin Cohen, who stayed and faced the trial. He was convicted by a jury, but Judge Thomas set the verdict aside as contrary to the evidence.

Cohen is now out of the firm and the concern has been incorporated under the name of the A. S. Rosenthal Company, with a capital of $200,000. The Directors are A. S. Rosenthal, C. F. Medd, a bookkeeper, and R. J. Beechinor, who was manager of the firm's branch house in Japan. Mr. Cohen is now in California.

An interesting coincidence is the recent incorporation of the silk firm of H. Mendelsohn & Co. S. Fried, who was formerly Rosenthal's partner, is one of the firm's leading men, and Godfrey Block, a relative of Rosenthal, and who it is said furnished the Government with the first evidence of the alleged frauds, was a member of the firm. He is now confined in a sanitarium, and has been dropped in the incorporation of the firm.

A DAY'S WEDDINGS.

PEIXOTTO—NATHAN.

The wedding of Miss Malvina Nathan and Edward D. Peixotto took place at noon yesterday at the residence of the bride's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Nathan, 162 West Eighty-sixth Street. The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Washington Nathan, and has made her home since the death of her parents with her sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. von Metz of Brighton, England. The bride's gown was white chiffon and lace, and her lace veil has been an heirloom in the von Metz family. Miss Emily Wolff was the maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were Miss Rosalia Nathan and Miss Frances Wolff. They were in white crêpe de chine, trimmed with yellow, and were white hats with yellow flowers. Mr. and Mrs. Peixotto, after a brief bridal tour, will go to San Francisco to live.

Among the guests at the breakfast were Baron and Baroness Moncheur and Baron von Swinderin of the Belgian Legation at Washington; the American Ambassador to Germany and Mrs. Charlemagne Tower, the American Minister to Belgium and Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Reynolds Hitt of the American Embassy in Berlin, Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Janney, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Putnam, the Misses Putnam, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Jennings, Miss Curtis, and Mrs. Frederic Thompson of New York, Joy Ridgway Reilly, and Mrs. A. Police Figures for August Show Marked Decrease from 1903.

Police Commissioner McAdoo gave out a comparative table yesterday showing the number of street accidents in the month of August of last year and the number during the corresponding month of this year, since the system of controlling street traffic instituted by former Deputy Commissioner Piper has been in effect.

The totals show a considerable decrease in accidents of all kinds during the month of this year. The figures are:

DR. LORIMER'S FUNERAL.

Young Women Lay White Chrysanthemums on His Bier.

The funeral of Dr. George Claude Lorimer, who died on Sept. 8 at Aix-les-Bains, was held at 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, of which he was pastor. The church was crowded. The Invocation was delivered by the Rev. A. D. Judson of the Judson Memorial Church of this city, and "Majestic Sweetness," Dr. Lorimer's favorite hymn, was

GRAVESEND CHOICES LOST THEIR RACES

Favorites Failed in All Six Events of Brooklyn Card.

HEAD FINISHES FOR STAKES

Backers of public form at the Gravesend track yesterday finished the day with faith in even proverbs, lost with bets on six straight losing favorites, for to believers in form, things shorn other than lambs might squeeze in for any tempered winds happening around. The wind was not tempered, however, but blew cold, and penetrating through the Summer attire of shorn bettors. There were lots of overcoats in sight, but there also were lots of straw hats, the overcoats holding the place of favoritism, however. The track was deep and a shade slow, but fair fields ran for all the six races, and in each event a favorite was made and beaten.

The feature event of the afternoon, the Occidental Handicap Stakes, at one mile and a furlong, furnished the nearest thing to a form reversal, when the top weight and favorite First Mason, was beaten, but as First Mason, carrying 126 pounds, was outrun in the first stages of the race, and then was so shut off on the turn that he dropped practically out of the contest, the accidents of the race seemed to make ample explanation of his defeat. For this race, the fourth on the programme, eleven horses ran, with First Mason, ridden by the Western jockey, A. W. Booker, always the best backed, while R. T. Wilson, Jr.,'s entry, made up of Dolly Spanker and Carbuncle, was rated as second choice, with W. B. Jennings's entry, Dainty and Proper, the next best backed.

The start was made with First Mason the first horse that actually showed out of the crowd, but he went slowly, and at once dropped away, Dolly Spanker, third at the start, taking command in the run to the stand for the first time, and going on there attended by Bad News, which broke second and held his place for a good part of the journey. To half way through the back stretch, the first two held their places, with Alan-a-Dale third, Mineola fourth, and Dainty fifth, Dainty beginning to move up as the far turn was approached, while Alan-a-Dale and Mineola fell away.

On the turn for the head of the stretch Dainty went forward with a rush, and speedily took second place, Bad News then being third, with Africander, which closed from far back in the crowd, then fourth, with Alan-a-Dale lapped on him. Beginning the run through the quarter stretch, Dainty set out with a gallant burst of speed after Dolly Spanker, still racing in front, and, closing on him just before the last furlong pole was reached, there drove the three-year-old to the whip. The two then were clear of the others, and both still fresh and full of running, and there ensued one of the most remarkable finishes of the season, for both the leaders were ridden by apprentices—Travers on Dolly Spanker and Crimmins on Dainty—and with a field of horses ridden by star jockeys coming on behind them, neither of the light boys made the least mistake.

Both waited to whip until it seemed the last chance must be taken, and when they went to the whip they whipped and rode with desperate determination. To the end they held the others of the field at a safe distance, the finish being between the two, and the older horse and the fresher of the two, as Dolly Spanker made the pace, got up at the finish and in a punishing fight to the last jump Dainty showed first on the post and won by a nose, while Africander, a length and a half away, got in third, with five other horses following him heads and noses apart. The time of the race—1:52 3-5—just equaled the record for the stakes, the first mile being run in 1:39 3-5.

In the opening event Letola led from end to end and won easily. Graceful waited second to Jack Ratlin for seven furlongs in the second race, and then went on and won handily, with the odds-on favorite, Lord Badge, beaten away off. Sweet Pepper led throughout in the third race and galloped in first. For the handicap for two-year-olds, Tongorder repeated Sweet Pepper's performance, and won well in hand, the favorite, St. Bellane, closing at the end, however, and finishing second. In the last race Stuyve and Grey Friar carried all the money and were nearly equal favorites, but Stuyve broke badly, and Canteen went out with Grey Friar and raced with him until he was willing to give it up, Canteen then coming away and winning easily. Mares Captured Five Races.

Fillies and mares achieved the most impressive results at the Gravesend track yesterday, five races, including the stake feature of the day, being won by fillies, while the single race that escaped them was the handicap for two-year-olds for which a single filly ran in a field of seven horses. Dainty captured the Occidental Handicap for the first time in the history of the fixture that it has been won by a mare or filly, and Graceful, the only one of her sex in the race, captured the overnight handicap from a field of four opponents. Letola beat sprinters of the harder sex in the first race, and Canteen galloped away from fast selling-class horses in the mile and seventy yards, while Sweet Pepper beat a fair lot of colts in the sprint for two-year-olds. The sweeping success of mares this Fall is something that has no precedent in racing, and though horsemen at the start were rather astonished, many of them now are somewhat inclined to attribute the cause to the ordinary quality of the horses that are making racing.

EMPIRE CITY HARNESS RACES.

Three Trotters Tie for Lead in Championship Class.

A surprise at the matinée race meet of the New York Driving Club at the Empire City track, Yonkers, yesterday afternoon, was the victory of A. E. Perren's Wilton Boy over Thomas B. Leahy's Princess Pique and John F. Cockerill's Anna Little in the championship trotting class. For several weeks past Princess Pique and Anna Little have been the only competitors in this class, and, being evenly matched, have alternated in the lead. Yesterday Wilton Boy, who had graduated from the next lower class at last Saturday's meeting, competed in the championship event for the first time, and defeated both Princess Pique and Anna Little in straight heats.

This result insures an interesting finish in the contest for the championship, which will be decided at the final matinée on Saturday of next week, as Wilton Boy, Princess Pique, and Anna Little are now all tied for first honors. Princess Pique, however, still leads in the contest for the President's Cup for trotters with a total of 42 points, Anna Little is second with 39 points, and Wilton Boy is third with 34 points. Among the pacers James A. Murphy's Free Advice leads for the pacing championship cup, and M. Bruckheimer's Baron Said for the President's Cup for pacers.

There were only two starters in the pacing championship class, James A. Murphy's Don Derby and Samuel McMillan's Enoch. Don Derby won the first heat, but it was claimed he was paced a part of the distance by a horse not in the race, and so the heat was given to Enoch. Don Derby, however, won the next two heats and the race with ease. Summaries:

MAJOR DELMAR FAILED.

Great Gelding Trotted in Half a Second Slower Than the Record.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Sept. 22.—Sensational racing, with a good though futile effort by Major Delmar to beat 2:02¾, interested a large crowd to-day. The Major was forced to contend against cold weather and light wind, which hindered him on the second turn. After trotting the first half in 1:02, he was unable to finish strong, and lost by half a second.

Sweet Marie, favorite in the 2:07 trot, made a break in the first heat, but recovered, so that George G. had to trot in 2:06¾ to win. This time makes George G. the fastest trotting race gelding of the year. Larrie Ginter and King Direct were about equal choices for the 2:08 pace, which developed into a four-cornered battle which could not be finished. Each heat was decided by a neck. Euxemite was an even-money favorite in the 2:15 trot, but Red Lac was the winner. Pulled up at the finish of the second mile, he got a mark of 2:06½, thus becoming the fastest trotting stallion of the year. Summaries:

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 22.—There was a further curtailment in local trading today, and there would not have been much of a market had it not been for Reading, the United States Steel shares, United Gas Improvement, Northern Central, and Philadelphia Traction. The latter was quite active, and it is evident that some important block is being liquidated. The stock, however, is well taken. United Gas Improvement was also a strong feature, while Northern Central was taken in hand and advanced 1½ points. Bergner & Engel Brewing was up ½. These were the most important changes, prices elsewhere being fairly steady. Bonds also showed little change. The sale of $55,000 United Railways 4 per cent. trust certificates at 81½@81¼ was the only feature of this department. Total sales, 25,222 shares, $98,600 bonds.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 22.—New York exchange was 20 cents discount. Time and call loans, 4½@5 per cent. The result of the purchase of about 5,000 shares of Can common during the morning was a brisk rise and trading over a range the top price of which was 5⅞. The preferred stock to the amount of about 1,600 shares changed hands during the morning at 45½@46¾. In the afternoon about 1,200 shares of Can common changed hands, and the stock closed at 5⅝, while approximately the small amount of the preferred took the price up to 47¾ and back to 47. Other trading of any magnitude consisted in the transactions in the bond department. North Chicago, 5 per cents of both 1906 and 1909, People's Gas 6s, Ogden Gas 5s, and Northwestern Elevated 4s changed hands in liberal amounts. In other stock there was little of interest. Biscuits were fairly firm, and City Railway again sold at 185.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Irregular; Call Money Easy, 1 3-4@2 Per Cent.

Stocks Move Uncertainly in Response to No Positive Factors of Value—Sterling Breaks Sharply.

The coldest Sept. 22 in local records of course had no relation to the irregularity of stock and produce markets yesterday. Our cold weather is simply the tail end of the cold wave which had already spent its force upon the crop regions. The strength of wheat on damage by locusts in Argentina is rather stimulating than weakening upon both wheat and wheat carriers. Corn closed down on the regular denial of frost damage, accompanied for a novelty by reports of warmer weather in expectation, and with an estimate by a trade authority of a minimum of 2,300,000,000 bushels, even if frost arrived, the damage already done being small. Cotton made some flickering response to a bull circular, but reacted under selling expressing views of a contrary sort.

The action of the stock market was as erratic as in the markets where real values are reflected in the making better at the moment than in the highly speculative and manipulated security market just now. The Union Pacific mystery failed to interest or even amuse any longer, just now, although eager interest awaits the next chapter. A somewhat similar activity in Southern Pacific almost failed even to catch attention. Both stocks were weak in company with the Grangers particularly, and with most stocks in general. The only rise to attract attention was in Ontario and Western. This seemed inconsistent with the management's announcement that it had all the voting power it wanted, but as the Directors were in session during the rise, there were inferences of something good to come, probably in the way of dividend news. The volume of trading was on a reduced scale, and the tone was so erratic that the interest in the proceedings was not stimulated.

The most suggestive feature of the day was the break in sterling, with an unchanged money market. When London is raising its price for gold, and nevertheless our exchange falls without reason or even excuse in the condition of our money market, it is almost superfluous to waste time talking or thinking about our local banking situation, when it compares so favorably with all recent experience.

DECLINE IN EXCHANGE.

Rumor of Gold Imports, but Rate Must Fall Still Lower Before Gold Can Come from London.

A sharp decline in sterling exchange yesterday gave increased interest to the discussion of possible gold imports, although in exchange circles it was said that all talk of bringing gold to this country from London was still premature. Despite this, a rumor was current that New York bankers had engaged $500,000 gold in London for shipment to New York, but in view of the day's exchange situation the report was pronounced absurd. The price of demand sterling dropped sharply yesterday to 4.8375, but before the close recovered from this low figure. It was said, however, that with the prevailing rates for money here the exchange rate would have to fall considerably more before gold imports could be thought of. Relatively little business was transacted in the exchange market yesterday, and the decline was due rather to small demand than to any large offerings of bills, or rather large sales of bills, for it was admitted that every one was desirous of selling long bills, although the demand was by no means large.

GENERAL BUSINESS ITEMS.

Coal shipments over Pennsylvania lines east of Pittsburg and Erie, week ended Sept. 17, were 842,247 tons, making the total for the year to date 28,028,871 tons, against 30,197,711 tons last year.

Earnings of the United States Leather Company for the month of August are said to have been the largest in the company's history.

Two big freight steamers, to cost $420,000 and $400,000, respectively, and to have a capacity of 10,000 tons each, have just been ordered from the American Shipbuilding Company.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Market Unsatisfactory to Traders—Interesting Move in Ontario—Union Pacific Weak.

It seemed to be generally agreed after the close of the market yesterday that the trading during the day had been very unsatisfactory. In some instances prices advanced fairly well, but when profit taking was begun quotations yielded easily, and even the issues which had been strongest in the early trading sold off enough in the later trading to entirely wipe out the morning's profits. The volume of business fell off considerably from the previous day's total, and during parts of the session there was no sign of the animation to which the Street has recently become reaccustomed. Between 1 o'clock and 2 less than 40,000 shares were dealt in, and it was only because of the relatively large trading in the last hour, due largely to the sudden activity in Ontario and Western, that the day's total escaped being a very small one.

Southern Pacific Supplants Union.

Southern Pacific held the place occupied the previous day by its parent stock, Union Pacific. Apparently the activity in Southern Pacific, accompanied early in the day by a good deal of strength, although this was all lost later on, was a reflex of the previous movement in Union Pacific, and by some was adjudged to have been brought about for a similar purpose. The buying of one stock to strengthen the general list while selling is proceeding is a familiar subterfuge of those who wish to dispose of stock, and many are of the opinion that this has been done both in Union Pacific and Southern Pacific for the past two days. Southern Pacific was as active yesterday as Union had been on Wednesday, supplying over one-fifth of the entire day's business. In the last hour the stock lost all that was left of the morning's point advance, and it closed with a net loss of three-eighths of a point, 1⅜ points below the best of the day. In Union Pacific all fear of competitive buying seemed to have been abandoned, and in no active stock was the selling more effective in depressing prices than in Union Pacific, which sold down 1⅜ points and closed at the lowest of the day.

Dividend Action Advances Ontario.

The movement in Ontario and Western, which added interest to an otherwise rather lifeless ending of a dull day, was coincident with the meeting of the Directors, at which was discussed the circular which is to be sent to the stockholders in regard to the financial plan. A decision was reached in regard to the proposed dividend, and the advance in the stock was ascribed to this action. It was suggested that the advance in Ontario and Western from 32¾ to 35 may have been based on the expectation that the dividend upon which the stockholders will be called to pass will be sufficiently large to have effect upon the price of the stock, even though it be recognized as merely a part of the plan for the readjustment of the road's affairs, so far as the voting trust is concerned. At 35, the highest price reached yesterday, there was much more stock for sale than found a market, and from this figure there was a sharp reaction of half a point.

Atchison Freely Offered.

Atchison failed altogether to show any signs of a short interest of the size which was thought to have been indicated by the borrowing demand for the stock, which was in evidence on Wednesday. The price declined 1¼ points on relatively little selling, and in the loan crowd at the close it was freely offered. As in Atchison, the demand for stocks generally was smaller than it had been the previous day.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Sept. 22.—Money was abundant in the market to-day, and rates were easy. Discounts were fairly steady.

Americans opened firm, in response to yesterday's closing tone in New York, but after some hardening sagged to below parity and closed weak.

Foreigners generally were firmer. Japanese and Russian securities weakened.

IN THE BUSINESS WORLD

Ostrich Feather Importers Protest Against High Duty.

Special Case Made to Determine Whether or Not Feathers in Raw State Are Ornamental.

Practically the entire ostrich feather and millinery trade was in attendance yesterday at a hearing before General Appraisers Lunt, Sharretts, and McClelland of a test case to determine the dutiable classification of raw ostrich feathers.

For years these feathers have been coming in at 15 per cent. as raw feathers, but last June General Appraiser McClelland wrote a decision declaring that they were dutiable at 30 per cent. as ornamental feathers. The importers, who were thoroughly alarmed, went to Washington and prevailed on Secretary Shaw to suspend the operation of this decision pending the trial of a new test case. This was the case heard yesterday, and it took the form of a protest by H. W. Brodie of I. Solomon & Co. against the 50 per cent. rate.

Witnesses from all the leading importing houses were examined and all testified that raw ostrich feathers were not ornamental and were never used for ornamental purposes, but had to go through various processes of manufacture before being fit for ornamental use. W. B. Coughtry appeared for the importers and B. F. Levett for the Government. The board reserved decision.

ESSENTIAL OILS ADVANCED.

Values Nearly Doubled in Big Importation of Perfumes.

The very heavy advance on the invoice values of a large importation of essential oils was announced yesterday by General Appraiser Lunt. The goods were shipped by Sozio & Andriole of Grasse, and were as follows: 567 kilos concrete oil of orris root, from 200f. to 425f. a kilo; 11.35 kilos oil of patchouli, from 25.35f. to 35f. per kilo, and 18.16 kilos of African geranium, from 30.25f. to 40f. per kilo.

General Appraiser Fischer announced a 25 per cent. advance on smokers' articles from Josef Bondeis of Vienna and entered at St. Louis as follows: 168 dozen unfinished cigar and cigarette holders, entered at 2 crowns; 100 dozen cigarette holders, at 1.60 crowns; 100 dozen pen and pencil, with views, at 1.40 crowns; 112 dozen unfinished pencils, at 70 crowns, and 18 dozen needle and thimble cases at 1.85 crowns.

Receiver for Metals Company.

Judge Holt of the United States District Court has appointed Alfred Roelker, Jr., receiver for the General Metals Company of 11 Broadway, and Mr. Roelker has started for Colorado City to look out for the interests of the company. The appointment was on an involuntary petition filed by Joseph M. Bacon, who states that the corporation has a capital stock of $900,000 now outstanding, and that its factory and place of business are of the value of about $500,000. Henry V. Palmer and Russell Parker also join in the appeal.

Sweetser, Pembrook & Co. Move.

It was announced yesterday by Sweetser, Pembrook & Co., the dry goods jobbing house now in liquidation, that they would surrender possession of their building at 376 Broadway on Oct. 1 to the Astor estate, which has released them from the remainder of their lease. The firm has taken up office in the New York Life Building, from which the work of liquidation will be completed

To Sell Big Packing Plant.

SEATTLE, Washington, Sept. 22.—The property of the Pacific Packing and Navigation Company, which is now in the hands of receivers, is to be sold at public auction. It consists of property estimated to be worth from $5,000,000 to $6,000,000.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

Of the liabilities, $5,310 were contracted in 1880; to creditors in this city, $2,006, from 1890 to 1904; $1,066 to creditors in Port Jervis, N. Y., 1889 to 1900, and $390 in Tarrytown, 1901 and 1902. Among the New York creditors are the Chatham National Bank, $2,030; Jennings & Griffin Manufacturing Company, $1,770, and C. E. Jennings & Co., $880. He was formerly a partner in the firm of William H. Goldey & Co. of 52 Vesey Street, who failed in January, 1890, and he owes $5,310 on that account. He owes $224 for pew rent to the Reformed Dutch Church of Port Jervis from 1894 to 1900, and $15 to the Deer Park Club of Port Jervis for dues.

He has been in Europe with his wife and daughter for several months, automobiling from place to place. Justice Truax accompanied them from Paris through Touraine.

Justice Dugro was well satisfied with the work of the Democratic State Convention, and said that Judge Herrick was in his opinion as strong a man as the Democrats could have selected.

ANOTHER UNION LEAVING THE BUILDING ALLIANCE

Mosaic Workers Want to Have Lock-Out Raised.

TWO MORE BREAKS REPORTED

Plumbers and Electrical Men Returning to Work as Individuals—Roofers Want More Pay.

The situation in the building trades showed further signs of clearing up yesterday. Another union in the Building Trades Alliance, that of the Mosaic Workers, is anxious to end its strike troubles, and is expected to surrender at any time. Representatives of the union, which is one of the locked-out organizations, had a conference with the employers yesterday, with a view to a settlement, and another conference will be held shortly, at which a settlement is looked for. No new union has been formed and a settlement now is the last chance the Mosaic Workers' Union has of keeping intact.

The loss of the 2,000 marble cutters is a serious blow to the Alliance, and, besides, the break in the Plasterers' Society, the employers reported breaks yesterday in Plumbers' Union No. 2. Weinselmer's organization, and the Electrical Workers' Union, No. 2. The Alliance, if the mosaic workers surrender, will have the following unions left, including those in which secessions are reported: Plasterers' Society, Journeymen Stone Cutters' Union, Derrickmen's Union, Brotherhood of Carpenters, Tile Layers' Union, Plumbers' Union No. 2, Electrical Workers' Union, Marble Polishers' Union, Salamander Association of Pipe and Boiler Coverers, Amalgamated Painters' Society, House Shorers and Movers' Union, and the Portable Safety and Hoisting Engineers' Union. Of these, the plasterers, carpenters, tile layers, plumbers, and electrical workers are still locked out.

Nearly all the 2,000 marble cutters whose strike was declared off found jobs yesterday, and between now and Monday the rest are expected to go back. Lewis Harding, chairman of the Press Committee of the Employers' Association, said last evening:

"The locked out unions, I expect, will not keep up the fight much longer. A revolt has taken place in Electrical Workers' Union No. 3, and more are coming individually from that union for work than the employers can take. The Contracting Plumbers' Association has to-day ratified its agreement with the National Plumbers' Association, by which the latter will be formed into a union with the National charter. A large break has taken place in Plumbers' Union No. 2, and twenty-five of its members are working for one contractor alone."

A meeting took place yesterday in the Building Trades Club between representatives of the Slate and Tile Roofers' Union of the Greater New York and the employers over a demand made by the union, which is not in the Alliance, for an increase in wages from $4 to $5. A compromise of $4.25 a day offered by the employers was refused, and the whole matter is to be left to a referendum vote of the union.

The Building Trades Alliance met yesterday and denounced ex-President William P. Nason and the Marble Cutters' Union. The resignation of the union, which was posted the night before, was on hand, but was not accepted, and the union was suspended. Nason's formal resignation as President was accepted, and Charles A. Judge of the Brotherhood of Carpenters was elected President in his stead.

TRAVELS OF VAGRANT GEYSER.

Wanders from Burst Pipe All Through 134½ Monroe Street.

A gang of men were at work making a sewer connection with a tenement at 134-142 Monroe Street yesterday afternoon when suddenly the trap flew off the twelve-inch water main, which was exposed. A column of water immediately shot high in the air, and, caught by the wind, the stream was blown through the windows of the top story of 134, which is unoccupied during remodeling operations. The wandering water flowed downstairs and damaged the grocery store of J. Levine, on the ground floor.

The fickle wind then blew the stream through the windows of 134½, which is well populated. The apartments of Mrs. Moisoff Muser and Mrs. Rose Mecklin were flooded, and, as the water sought its level via ceiling and staircase, families on the lower floors were forced to evacuate. Presently the tenants of the building were wringing themselves out on the sidewalk. The only consolation they had was that a piano which had been the terror of the second floor was silenced forever.

So powerful was the water spout while it lasted that no one could pass it to ascertain whether the baby of a certain Mrs. Finkelstein was on the sidewalk under the back flow from the building. Mrs. Finkelstein felt convinced that the baby was there and drowning. Several attempts were made to ford the geyser, but the laborers did not seem to relish the job. Mrs. Finkelstein wept; then a kind-hearted and neatly dressed stenographer named Bertha Black dashed through the geyser to the rescue. Presently she emerged wheeling with difficulty the perambulator containing the weeping infant Finkelstein. All cheered in spite of their dampened ardor.

BLAMES RAILROADS FOR FIRES.

Half of Adirondack Damage Due to Train Crews, Map Shows.

"Forest Fires in the Adirondacks in 1903" is the title of a pamphlet issued by the Association for the Protection of the Adirondacks. It embodies the report of H. M. Suter, agent of the Bureau of Forestry of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The pamphlet contains a map showing the burned districts, which indicates that "fully one-half of the fires are due to carelessness of engine crews of the New York Central, the New York and Ottawa, and the Chateaugay, a part of the Delaware and Hudson system." The society will send copies upon application at its offices in the Tribune Building.

Hammett Murder Suspect Freed.

Capt. Alexander Abrahamsen of the scow Flint, who was arrested on suspicion in connection with the death of Private James P. Hammett of the Eightieth Company of Coast Artillery, was discharged by Coroner O'Gorman of the Bronx yesterday, the evidence showing that he had nothing to do with the case. The soldier, who was found murdered in Westchester Creek, on July 28, had been seen in the neighborhood of Abrahamsen's boat.

TALKED BACK TO THE MAYOR.

Brooklynite Enlivens Hearing on New Bridge Traffic Plans.

Mayor McClellan gave a public hearing yesterday afternoon to a delegation of Brooklynites who object to the terms of the contract Bridge Commissioner Best has offered to the railroad companies on the Williamsburg Bridge. The main objections were that under the contract the railroad companies are not obliged to specify what if any cars will cross the bridge, and there is no provision compelling the companies to give transfers. Some of the speakers criticised the delay in the bridge, and one of them, A. B. W. Firmin, when asked by the Mayor if he was an engineer, replied that the Mayor had no business to ask a citizen how he made his living.

"If you want to know," Mr. Firmin said, "I am not an engineer, but a man does not have to be a shoemaker to know if his shoes fit."

Henry C. Wright of the Citizens' Association of Jamaica suggested that an elevated road be built across the bridge to extend across Manhattan.

"I wasted six weeks once," said the Mayor, "trying to convince the Rapid Transit Commission that was a good scheme, but I did not succeed. It would be impossible to make such a route without legislation."

"Then why don't you get the legislation?" demanded Mr. Wright.

"We may," replied the Mayor. "After Jan. 1 we may have a legislature and Executive who will listen to reason."

There was a cheer at this, but Mr. Wright did not cheer. He looked mournful and said:

"I am afraid the outlook is rather unfavorable if that is the only chance we have of relief."

"May we have your assurance that you will do the best you can for us?" asked W. Sugarman of the Brownsville Board of Trade after he had made an appeal for the residents there who cannot afford to pay 8 cents.

"You had that assurance when I took the oath of office," replied the Mayor. "It seems hardly necessary for me to repeat it."

NO MORE PART-TIME CLASSES.

Consolidation of Upper Grades Will Give Every Pupil a Seat.

A plan for eliminating part-time classes in the public schools will be put into operation throughout the city in a few weeks. The scheme leaves altogether out of consideration Mayor McClellan's letter to the Board of Education, and will consolidate the classes in the final two years of the elementary school course.

The congestion in the schools is confined to the lowest grades, while the highest classes are usually small. By centralizing these small higher classes in convenient schools in each borough it will be possible to place enough seats at the disposal of the younger children to accommodate all of them properly.

Supt. C. B. J. Snyder of the Building Bureau of the Department of Education has announced that there are 578,397 sittings in the school system. The registry in the schools this Fall is 568,232, while the largest actual attendance is 494,690. A comparison of the figures shows that there are 84,000 vacant seats in the city every school day, and that there would be 10,000 even if the attendance equaled the registry. The number of children on part time is 81,318.

In order to make it possible to utilize the central, or academic, schools under the plan the city will transport pupils from outlying districts. The Dowling bill, which passed the Legislature during the last session, empowers the Department of Education to make contracts with the car companies for the transportation of pupils, and a trial car has daily been carrying 100 children for half fare from Inwood along Amsterdam Avenue to One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Street, in Manhattan, in the mornings and back at night.

SALOON KEEPER HAD ENEMIES.

Police Believe Clue in McNally Murder Case Promising.

Detectives of the Flushing Avenue Police Station and five Central Office men worked all day yesterday without solving the mysterious shooting of Frank McNally, the saloon keeper, in his apartments over the saloon at 104 Park Avenue, Brooklyn, early Wednesday morning. Late last night, however, Capt. Toole announced that he had a clue which he thought might be promising.

Michael Costelloe, an employe in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, who used to live in the same house with McNally, but who now lives at 23 Adelphi Street, told the detectives a story which seems to have a close bearing on the murder. He said:

"About four months ago I was sitting in the back room of McNally's place talking to him, when a big, respectably dressed chap came in, and, shaking his fist under McNally's nose, said: 'You've broken up my home, and if I live long enough I'll get even with you. I'll fix you yet.'"

McNally did not reply to this threat, and went on with his work as if he had heard nothing. The man went out of the place, and Costelloe says that he has never seen him since. He furnished the police with a fair description of the man.

Another person looked for is a woman, about thirty years old, who frequently visited McNally's place in company with a girl about nine years old. The child attracted attention because of her ability as a performer on the piano. The woman always dressed in black and was tall and good looking.

The five bullet wounds in McNally's body were made by a revolver held very close to him, as his underclothing was powder scorched. It is supposed that he got the wound in his finger while trying to get the pistol away from his assailant.

RAID SURPRISED POLICEMEN.

Men from Headquarters Sent Up to Clean Out Alleged Bronx Poolroom.

In a raid on an alleged poolroom yesterday afternoon in the Bronx, made without the knowledge of Capt. Ferris of the Tremont Station and without the assistance of Inspector Albertson, Detective Sergeant Burke of Headquarters and three policemen arrested three men. The prisoners said they were George Davis, thirty-five years old, of 629 West One Hundred and Forty-fifth Street; Eugene Gorman, thirty years old, of 887 East One Hundred and Forty-first Street, and Joseph McCabe, forty years old, of 1,647 Arthur Avenue, the Bronx.

The alleged poolroom was on the first floor in the rear of a saloon in Webster Avenue, near One Hundred and Seventy-fifth Street. The police had no trouble getting in and stood around several minutes watching the men make bets. As a prearranged signal they told everybody they were under arrest. The crowd made for the windows and many of them escaped. The alleged manager, hatless and coatless, jumped from a window, and several shots failed to stop him. A telephone and various racing sheets and charts were seized.

CITY'S COLDEST SEPT. 22.

Temperature Down to 40—Open Cars Still a Reminder of Summer.

Yesterday was the coldest Sept. 22 the Weather Bureau in this city has ever recorded. New Yorkers awoke yesterday morning to find that the temperature had fallen from 51 degrees at midnight on Wednesday to 40 degrees at 6 o'clock. The air was frosty, and in the outlying districts the grass, trees, and fences showed the slightest suggestion of frost diamonds. Those who left for their places of business before the sun was well up found overcoats necessary for comfort. A slight wind from the north helped the cold.

In Manhattan and Brooklyn the railroad companies operated their open Summer cars just as though the thermometer hadn't taken a tumble. In Brooklyn the chief fault was found with the open elevated cars.

Convicted of Arson, May Get 20 Years.

Julius Hudell, twenty-seven years old, a car conductor, of 66 East One Hundred and Nineteenth Street, was convicted of arson in the second degree before Recorder Goff in Part II., General Sessions, yesterday afternoon, and remanded until to-day for sentence. The limit for the crime is twenty years. Hudell was charged with setting fire to a tenement at 113 East One Hundred and Nineteenth Street on May 31 last.

LOF BOUGHT A BLIND HORSE.

Found Out Afterward, for Cohen Didn't Think to Tell Him.

Trading horses seems to be a little beyond the successful ken of Joseph Lof of 278 Seventh Street. He was a prisoner in the Essex Market Court yesterday, charged with abandoning an animal for which he had paid $30 but a week ago to Samuel Cohen of 18 Essex Street, before whose door he left the beast after Cohen had refused to take it back as a gift.

Cohen in court asserted that his conduct in the matter had been honorable and above board, since at the time of the transaction Lof had not asked him whether the animal could see, and he had not, therefore, thought it necessary to say that the horse was totally blind or, in fact, to bring up the matter of eyesight at all.

"Have you been taking points from David Harum?" asked Magistrate Ommen.

"No, your Honor, I never heard of that gentleman," replied Cohen.

The blind horse, it was learned, succeeded one which was shot by an agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, who told the story in court. Lof bought that horse just a week before his trade with Cohen. Magistrate Ommen failed to see that any crime had been committed, and disposed of the case by advising that the horse be taken to the public pound.

Quit City Jobs to Teach School.

Three city jobs are vacant through the resignations of Register of Records in the Tenement House Department of William R. Patterson and John A. Murray and William Breckstone, clerks of the department. Mr. Patterson resigns from the $3,000 position to join the Faculty of the State University College, Iowa City, and the clerks their $1,050 jobs to become school teachers.

Dry Dock Plaintiff Still Missing.

The mysterious disappearance of Bernard Rice, the Buffalo traveling salesman who complained to the police that he had been drugged and robbed at the Dry Dock Hotel last Monday night, resulted in another postponement in the hearing of the case against Mrs. Rosie Hertz in the Yorkville Court yesterday afternoon. Magistrate Flammer set the hearing for to-morrow, and continued the case against Max Swarts, clerk in the hotel, who was arrested on the charge of conducting a disorderly house, until Monday.

HINDU GETS BEST OF IT.

Free Board While U. S. and Ship Owners Scrap Over Deporting Him.

The Barber Steamship Company and the United States Government are at odds over the disposal of a Hindu who appeared at Ellis Island six months ago, saying that he had deserted from the steamship Satsuma. He was ordered deported, and has since remained at the island because the steamship people would not take him back. They say he did not come over on the Satsuma. The Hindu calls himself Obdur Rahman.

It was in March that he applied to the immigration authorities for assistance. A few days later, when the Satsuma was about to sail, he was sent aboard. The Captain appealed to Barber & Co., his agents, who refused to take the Hindu.

Rahman was then taken back to Ellis Island, to remain until the ship should return. The authorities at Washington decided that he had been a sailor on the ship and ordered that the Satsuma take him back. The ship sailed again yesterday, and when the Hindu was taken aboard the Captain again refused to take him. He said the authorities had not proved their case, and refused to obey the orders from Washington. The Hindu was again returned to Ellis Island, where he must stay another six months before the ship returns.

BATTLESHIP FLEET BREAKS UP.

Vessels Anchored Off Tompkinsville Receive Orders to Move.

The battleships in the North Atlantic fleet which arrived here last Sunday and anchored off Tompkinsville, Staten Island, received orders to move yesterday, breaking up the squadron which has been a source of interest to thousands and a source of revenue to the Staten Island boatmen. The Kearsarge passed up to the navy yard in the afternoon, where she went into drydock. The Maine received orders to go to Boston, and sailed away. The Missouri will go to Boston as soon as the Massachusetts, which is at target practice off Martha's Vineyard, returns. The Illinois, Massachusetts, and the Texas are the only vessels which have not finished their work.

The Illinois will receive orders when she arrives in a few days to go into drydock at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. The Alabama leaves to-day for the League Island Navy Yard, where she will get an overhauling. Capt. Davis of the Alabama has been promoted to be Rear Admiral, and will raise his flag over the Second Division of the North Atlantic fleet. Capt. William H. Reeder will relieve him in command of the battleship.

CAMPAIGN WORK KEEPS PARKER ANOTHER DAY

Candidate Considering Question of Speaking Dates.

PLAN FOR MEETING HERE

Manhattan Club Wants Him at Madison Square Garden—May Be Heard in Nearly All Doubtful States.

Contrary to his original plans, Judge Parker did not return to Esopus last night, but spent the evening conferring with his campaign managers. His engagement extended far into the night, and it may be late this afternoon or evening before he will leave the city.

One of the chief topics discussed yesterday was the question of the nominee taking the stump. Strong pressure is being exerted by the Judge's friends in the Manhattan Club to have him speak at a big meeting in Madison Square Garden early in October, which they want to make the opening of his speaking campaign. De Lancey Nicoll and District Attorney Jerome would probably be the other speakers. Justice Truax, the President, and Charles W. Dayton are the leading spirits in the movement.

It has been pointed out to the Judge that by speaking under the auspices of the Manhattan Club he would not be slighting Tammany, as the Wigwam is liberally represented in the organization. Senator Victor J. Dowling is one of the chief figures of the Campaign Committee of the club, which would have charge of the meeting. It is expected that Judge Parker will decide about the meeting by next week.

It was said confidently by Judge Parker's friends yesterday that he would make several speeches during the campaign. According to present plans, to which Judge Parker, it is said, has partly assented, two speeches will be made in New York City, one to open and the other to close his speaking campaign. Two speeches up the State are contemplated, one in Buffalo, and the other in Rochester, Syracuse, or Albany. A speech in Boston is being urged; another in Baltimore, one at some point in West Virginia, one in Louisville, one in Indianapolis, one in Chicago, one in Milwaukee, one in Minneapolis, one in St. Louis, and one each in Denver and Kansas City if the candidate can be persuaded to go so far West. Some definite announcement probably will be made when Judge Parker returns to the city next week.

Judge Parker was busy all day yesterday. A constant stream of visitors who had appointments called at his rooms in the Hoffman House. He had nothing to say further than the announcement through his secretary that he had come to confer with his managers.

In spite of his late hours the night before the Judge was up at 6:30 o'clock in the morning and took a stroll before breakfast. Unattended he walked down Fifth Avenue to Washington Square, around the park, and then back to his hotel. He left the hotel by the side entrance and returned the same way, so that none saw him come or go save the hotel employes, and so far as is known he was not recognized on the street.

Senator Arthur Pue Gorman of Maryland spent much time with the candidate. The Senator is supposed to have been in Albany the night before discussing matters with Judge D Cady Herrick. While Senator Gorman was with Judge Parker, Col. Daniel S. Lamont arrived and the three were together for some time. Senator Gorman left at 3 o'clock, but Col. Lamont remained and took luncheon with the candidate in a private room. During the luncheon National Committeeman Daniel J. Campau of Michigan joined the party and remained for nearly an hour.

Prior to the coming of Senator Gorman Judge Parker saw Thomas F. Ryan, William S. Rodie, who has charge of the State Committee's up-State bureau; Senator Charles A. Culberson of Texas, Herman Ridder, Chairman Taggart of the National Committee, Perry Belmont, National Committeeman Timothy E. Ryan of Wisconsin, Secretary Urey Woodson, and James Hamilton Lewis.

In the afternoon Judge Parker spent more than an hour with ex-Senator Jones of Arkansas and ex-Gov. Hogg of Texas. Col. James M. Guffey of Pennsylvania and Senator Culberson also dropped in. These visitors were all prominent in the Bryan campaign and they said all of the Bryan men were working heart and soul for Judge Parker. Col. Guffey said he would be at National headquarters right along until the close of the campaign. Other visitors were Representatives John Sharp Williams of Mississippi and William S. Cowherd of Missouri.

William F. Sheehan called later in the afternoon and was followed by Senator McCarren and Borough President Littleton, who walked into the Hoffman House arm in arm. They spent an hour in Judge Parker's room.

Last evening early the Judge received a delegation of Germans introduced by Mr. Ridder. After this delegation Judge Parker, accompanied by Secretary McCausland, went to the Manhattan Club for dinner. Both ex-Senator Hill and Charles F. Murphy are expected in the city to-day to join the conferences.

MRS. MANSFIELD'S INJURY.

Her Husband, the Actor, Acknowledges Many Inquiries Made.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Sept. 23.—Mrs. Richard Mansfield, who met with an accident while riding horseback Wednesday, is still suffering from its effects. The physicians expect to find that her injury is not a very serious one.

"Mrs. Mansfield is about the same," said Mr. Mansfield to-night. "I have received hundreds of letters and telegrams asking about her. I can't answer them now, but I want all my friends to know that I appreciate their kindness. We are hoping that my wife will be well before long."

NINE SCHOOLGIRLS DROWNED.

Thirty Precipitated Into Cistern by Floor's Collapse in an Ohio School.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 23.—Nine school girls were suffocated in a cistern during the forenoon recess at the school at Pleasant Ridge, seven miles north of this city, and a score of others narrowly escaped death.

During the rest of the day this suburb was wild with mingled excitement, sorrow, and indignation, and to-night men and women, openly charging the calamity to official negligence, are making serious threats.

The building at Pleasant Ridge is used for a high school as well as for all lower departments. About thirty of the smaller girls were in one of the school buildings, when suddenly the floor gave way, precipitating them into the cistern, which is twelve feet deep and walled up with stone like a well.

There was in it four feet of water, and the children who fell in first were kept down by those struggling above them.

The Principal and other teachers rushed to the rescue, and they were soon reinforced by the entire population of the town, the Police and Fire Departments. In the meantime, James Smith, aged fourteen, one of the pupils, climbed to the roof of the schoolhouse and untied the flag, and by means of this impromptu rope several were rescued.

William J. Card, a merchant, of Cincinnati, had three daughters in the place, of whom Charmian, aged nine, and Fausta, eleven, lost their lives. Rotha, the twin sister of Fausta, narrowly escaped. The other victims were Lauretta Finke, thirteen, daughter of Henry Finke of the Schroth Packing Company, Cincinnati; Emma Steinkamp, thirteen, daughter of John Steinkamp; Amelia Hesse, nine, daughter of Herman D. Hesse, dairyman; Martha Buhr, eight, father dead, mother Ella Buhr; Edna Thee, ten, daughter of John Thee, blacksmith; Hazel Glover, aged eight, parents dead, lived with grandmother, Mrs. Wolf, and Lillian Witham, thirteen, daughter of W. A. Witham, a farmer.

BATTLE OVER A MISSIONARY.

War in Carolina Mountains Follows Woman's Lecture in Ohio.

Special to The New York Times.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Sept. 23.—News comes from Hudson, a little mountain village near Hickory, that Miss Pauline Abbott, a Presbyterian missionary, and her assistant, have fled from Hudson for their lives. Several persons were killed and a large number wounded as the result of a general battle among the mountaineers provoked by Miss Abbott's criticism of the mountain people in a public lecture she made in Ohio to raise money for her school.

She was quoted as saying that store-made clothes were a revelation to these mountain people; that the women spun and made all the clothing; that they had never heard of George Washington and had never seen a newspaper.

Miss Abbott little reckoned how deep the resentment was against her when she returned. When she realized it she told some of her neighbors that she had been the victim of a sensational newspaper reporter. A number took her part, and then a general battle followed.

Miss Abbott's army was led by Jim Bollinger. Two brothers named Lingle championed the other side. Bollinger's brother-in-law, Martin, was killed, half a dozen of his men were seriously wounded, and his army was put to flight and driven out of the community.

SUES FOR $50,000,000.

Mrs. Greenough Begins New Action Against H. H. Rogers.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Sept. 23.—The $50,000,000 suit brought by Mrs. Elizabeth P. Greenough of New York against Henry H. Rogers was to-day withdrawn from court in its original form and another suit was substituted. The heirs of Charles Pratt are also defendants. The claim made is for the original sum of $50,000,000. Alfred Hemenway of Boston, counsel for Mr. Rogers, has accepted service of the writ in the new suit.

Mrs. Greenough is endeavoring to recover a quarter of a cent for every gallon of oil sold by the Standard Oil Company under a certain process. Years ago Mr. Greenough made an assignment of his patent and rights to Rogers and Pratt. It is alleged that Rogers and Pratt turned the rights over to the Standard Oil Company.

BOILER BURSTS; FOUR DEAD.

New Fireman's Blunder Causes Disastrous Explosion Near Raleigh.

RALEIGH, N. C., Sept. 23.—The boiler in the gin department of the mammoth cotton mill, Erwing No. 3, at Dukes, on the Cape Fear and Northern Railroad, about twenty-five miles from Raleigh, exploded with terrific violence at 7:15 o'clock this morning, instantly killing four men and partially wrecking the engine room. The dead are Henry C. Fowler of Burlington, General Superintendent of the mills; Lee Hurst, fireman; H. G. Braswell, and George McLean, a negro. Henry Wall, also a negro, was fatally scalded.

From the best information obtainable it seems that the old fireman of the mill had just been discharged, and the new man had gotten up too much steam. The engine refused to work and the fireman went after the Superintendent. As they entered the engine room together there was a rending roar, and the men were blown to pieces.

WIFE GETS $300,000 ESTATE.

Son Loses in Fight to Break David H. Barnet's Will.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 23.—Judge Skinner in the Orphans' Court to-day signed an order directing the executors of the estate of David H. Barnet to turn over to the widow, Julia H. Barnet, the property, amounting to about $300,000, which was bequeathed to her in the will.

The case was brought before the court by the action of Frederick W. Barnet, son of the testator, who took exception to the terms of the will and filed a caveat. David H. Barnet, the testator, was formerly an Alderman. He died in 1892, leaving his entire estate to his wife, who was not the mother of Frederick Barnet, and who had been divorced from her furst husband prior to her marriage to Barnet, who had also been divorced from his first wife. It was generally understood that because of the son's determined advocacy of his mother's rights his father was likely to leave him little of his estate.

WHERE WAS CUNNEEN? THE GOVERNOR ASKS

Says Attorney General Might Have Learned of Corruption.

ODELL BECOMES AGGRESSIVE

Offered to Resign, It's Said—Republicans Won't Let Him "Dignify" Charges—Will Reply, Though.

Gov. Odell last night issued a virtual challenge to his Democratic critics and those within his own party who have brought charges against him reflecting upon his personal integrity to produce proof of their accusations.

The Executive Committee of the Republican State Committee was in session for nearly two hours in one of the parlors of the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday afternoon considering chiefly what course the commitee ought to take with respect to the charges made in the Democratic platform against the Governor-Chairman. After the meeting and after eating dinner the Governor-Chairman, smoking one of his big black cigars, walked over to a group of newspaper men who stood in the corridor of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and said:

"A thought has occurred to me which I want to throw out to you gentlemen. If all the official corruption and perversion of public funds about which so much was said in the Democratic platform has been going on at Albany for the past four years, what has the Democratic Attorney General, Mr. Cunneen, been doing? He is a member of nearly all the State boards and has to pass on all bills put through the Legislature. Why has he not begun prosecutions if there is any truth in these charges we hear so much about?"

As the Governor-Chairman propounded these questions, Wilbur F. Wakeman, Secretary of the American Protective Tariff League, stepped up and handed the Governor-Chairman a three-ring puzzle, the problem being how to separate the rings without forcing them apart.

"Just try it, and get your mind off politics," said Wakeman. Thus pressed, the Governor tried the puzzle, but, failing to do the trick after a few minutes' effort, gave it up. He was not soothed, either, but repeated his question as aggressively as ever.

The meeting of the Republican Executive Committee at the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday was the first important conference held since the Republican State ticket was nominated. William Barnes presided, and the others present were Gov. Odell, George W. Dunn, Louis Stern, George W. Aldridge, Francis Hendricks, Michael J. Dady, John T. Mott, Louis F. Payn, William L. Ward, Charles H. Murray, William C. Warren, and Edward Lauterbach.

There was considerable discussion as to the best policy which the Republican State Committee could pursue with respect to the charges made in the Democratic State platform against the personaly integrity of Gov. Odell and the allegations of corruption in connection with the administration of State affairs during the last four years of Republican administration at Albany.

It is said that Gov. Odell informed the committee that he thought it would be beneath his dignity as Governor to undertake to answer the charges against his personal integrity. He is reported to have said that he regarded the impeachment of his personal honesty as mere mud slinging on the part of David B. Hill. If he were guilty of the charges made against him, he said, he would be absolutely unfit either to hold the position of Governor or to direct a campaign of his party, and he regarded such a suggestion as an insult which was unworthy of notice.

The committee is said to have agreed unanimously with the Governor that any attempt at self-justification on his part was uncalled for and would be unbecoming the dignity of his office. But at the same time it was the consensus of opinion that the charges could not be ignored. The prevailing belief was that the best policy which the committee could pursue in the campaign would be to have all the orators speaking under its direction give challenge to the Democrats to present proof of their grave accusations or stand convicted of slander. This decision met with the hearty indorsement of Gov. Odell, it was said. His own statement last night was regarded by the politicians at the Fifth Avenue as indicating that Gov. Odell has concluded to take the aggressive with respect to the accusations against him and make a demand for proof.

There was a report that during the meeting of the committee Gov. Odell had offered to resign either as Governor or as State Chairman if the committee thought he ought to do so. Gov. Odell was asked about this last night. He evaded a direct answer as to whether he had made such a proposal by saying:

"I do not intend to resign either place."

It was formally decided by the Executive Committee to open the State campaign in Brookln on the night of Oct. 12 with a big mass meeting and rally. All of the candidates on the State ticket will be present and Senator Chauncey M. Depew will be the chief orator. Ex-Lieut. Gov. Woodruff will preside.

LADY CURZON A LITTLE BETTER.

But Her Condition Is Still Critical—Five Doctors at the Castle.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—It was announced this evening that there was a slight improvement in the condition of Lady Curzon of Kedleston. It is, however, still critical.

It was stated in the morning that Lady Curzon was a little better, and that her strength had been well maintained.

Five physicians are at Walmer Castle, and all of them were in attendance on Lady Curzon throughout Thursday night.

Lord Curzon's reappointment as Viceroy of India was gazetted to-day.

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—Mrs. Levi Z. Leiter, her daughters, Daisy and Nannie, and her son, Joseph, arrived here to-day from Denver. Mrs. Leiter and her daughters will start for New York at once, and will there embark on the first fast liner for Europe in order to reach Lady Curzon's bedside in the shortest possible time.

Joseph Leiter said to-day it would be impossible for him to go abroad.

SIMLA, Sept. 23.—The greatest concern is felt here because of Lady Curzon's illness, and the bulletins regarding her condition are anxiously awaited.

Senator Knox Calls on the President.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—Senator Knox of Pennsylvania, who is preparing an important speech to be delivered before the Business Men's League in Philadelphia Oct. 1, spent some time with the President to-day, and later was the guest of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt at luncheon.

RECEIVER FOR DREAMLAND.

Announcement Made at Coney Island Resort—Long Line of Creditors.

Creditors of the Dreamland Amusement Company, who thought the last night of the season offered a good opportunity to collect their bills, gathered at the office of that resort on Coney Island last evening. They were informed that positively no bills would be paid at that time and that a receiver would be appointed for the concern on Monday, and that before him all bills would have to pass for purposes of auditing.

About forty creditors were in line at one time, their claims being mostly for supplies furnished the big show place, including paint, varnish, lumber, ironwork, &c. Great disappointment was expressed, but there were no signs of indignation.

Some lingered about the office until 1 o'clock this morning, when all of the lights had been extinguished save those in the office where a single official sat in the rather gloomy room and repeated his story of the coming receivership over and over again.

The Dreamland Amusement Company was incorporated two years ago under the laws of the State of New York. Ex-State Senator William H. Reynolds has been the President of the company and Patrick H. McCarren and other local political leaders of note held heavy interests.

One report last night had it that Mr. Reynolds had dropped out of the company. He could not be reached last night, however. Little surprise was expressed by those who heard the news, which did not spread so quickly as it might have, because all the island was engrossed in the closing Mardi Gras festival ceremonies.

FAVORS LIMITED MARRIAGES.

George Meredith Predicts System of Matrimony for Certain Periods.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—A silly-season newspaper discussion of the marriage question has provoked a remarkable statement of opinion from George Meredith, the novelist, who, in an interview in The Daily Mail, welcomes free discussion of the subject, though, as he confesses, "everything that ought to be said has to be cut in half."

He predicts a change in the legal conditions of marriage and foreshadows a state of society permitting marriages for certain limited periods, the State enforcing a provision of money during that period to provide for and educate children, the Government possibly taking charge of this fund. Mr. Meredith says:

"There will be a devil of an uproar before such a change can be made. It will be a great shock; but look back and see what shocks there have been and what changes have nevertheless occurred in the marriage business in the past."

Mr. Meredith foresees great difficulty in English conservatism, notably revealed in criticism of America, "indicating the Englishman's persistency in regarding any new trait as a sign of disease. Yet," Mr. Meredith says, "it is a sign of health, and I am very glad if any words of mine can help air the subject."

WOMAN AERONAUT DROWNS.

Her Parachute Dropped Into a Lake, Holding Her Under Water.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILLIPSBURG, Kan., Sept. 23.—A balloon ascension and parachute leap here today resulted in the drowning of Mrs. S. B. Hendricks in the Rock Island Lake. At 6:30 this evening the ascension took place, the balloon drifting to the northeast.

When above the pond Mrs. Hendricks made the leap, thinking that she could swing the parachute away from the pond, but her efforts failed and she was buried under the parachute in twenty feet of water a hundred feet away from shore.

Several good swimmers plunged into the lake, and others in a boat attempted to tow her to the shore, but the body, entangled in the meshes of the cumbersome parachute, capsized the boat and nearly resulted in the drowning of one of the occupants.

A second boat succeeded in towing the parachute and the body to the shore. Four physicians worked over the lifeless form for two hours without avail.

RUSSIANS SNUB DON JAIME.

Tell Him to Stop Writing for Papers—Father Also Angry with Him.

VENICE, Sept. 23.—The report published in the United States that an attempt has been made to assassinate Don Carlos, the Spanish Pretender, is without foundation.

The only news here in regard to Don Carlos is that he is having trouble with his son Don Jaime, who is with the Russian army in the Far East, and who is said to have written against Catholicism, which might have an effect upon the Carlist Party in Spain.

Don Carlos has also been informed that Don Jaime has been forbidden by the Russian authorities to write any more letters to the Italian press on the situation in the Far East.

Don Jaime has been distinguishing himself in various ways since he has been in the Far East. His prophecies of what the Russians were going to do to the Japanese surpassed the predictions of even the most sanguine officials in St. Petersburg, while his descriptions of Japanese atrocities caused a sensation for a time, although they received little credence even in the pro-Russian European newspapers.

According to his own account Don Jaime, after seeing dead Russian soldiers who had been mutilated by Japanese, drew up a proclamation, which he signed with his royal signature, imploring the Japanese to desist from such practices. This proclamation was left so that the Japanese could read it when the Russians advanced north with the enemy behind them.

Gen. Oku afterward made an explicit denial of Don Jaime's charges.

SAYS IRISH RACE IS DYING.

John E. Redmond Also Declares It Is Slipping from Its Moorings.

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—To an audience of his countrymen that filled every seat in the Auditorium, John E. Redmond, M. P., the Irish Nationalist leader, uttered this warning:

"Our race is slipping from its moorings—it is dying. If we are passive and inactive Ireland will cease to be the home of the Celt. There are more old men and little children and fewer young men and women in that island than in any other country on earth.

"The death of the race can only be warded off by acting in the living present. We must not neglect an opportunity."

JAPANESE CLOSING IN ON KUROPATKIN

Flanking Movement by Kuroki Northeast of Mukden.

FOUR ARMIES ARE ADVANCING

Now Said in St. Petersburg That the Russians May, After All, Evacuate the Manchurian Capital.

ST. PETERSBURG, Saturday, Sept. 24.—Gen. Kuropatkin telegraphed yesterday that the Japanese had assumed the offensive from Bentsiaputze and that they were moving on Fu Pass. This is a village six miles northeast of Mukden, on the railroad from Mukden to the Fu-Shun mines. The railroad is a branch of the main line from Harbin to Port Arthur.

Fu Pass is near the right bank of the Hun River. The river at this point is shallow, and probably for this reason the locality has been selected by the Japanese for crossing.

If the Japanese succeed in gaining a foothold at Fu Pass, Gen. Kuropatkin's position at Mukden will be insecure, as the Japanese will be able to threaten the Russian line of communications. Fu Pass is only twenty miles north of Bentsiaputze, but at the present rate of progress the Japanese will probably occupy four or five days in traversing the distance.

The absence of detailed reports from the seat of war, despite the important character of events that are believed to be developing, leads to the supposition that Gen. Kuropatkin may, after all, not seriously contest the Japanese advance and that the long-expected battle at Mukden may turn out to be merely a rearguard action upon a large scale. In the dispatches received yesterday no mention was made of resistance to the Japanese advance.

The Russian force south of Mukden is believed to consist of only one army corps, which is acting as a rear guard and is not intended to offer serious resistance to the Japanese.

A dispatch received yesterday from Mukden gives details of the Japanese positions as follows:

Gen. Kuroki has concentrated one army with Bentsiaputze as its base, and his advance is pushing forward along the road leading to Fu-Shun and Fu Pass. The advance forces of the other two armies occupy the Yen-Tai Mines, and the village of Yen-Tai and Sandenu. The front of these three armies is protected by an outpost screen, which Chinese are not allowed to pass. A small Japanese detachment is moving along the left bank of the Liao River in order to protect junks Sing-Min-Tong is still held by the Cossacks.

The same dispatch reports that Chinese bandits are openly siding with the Japanese.

The weather at Mukden is rainy and windy, and cold has prematurely set in.

Russians Using Balloons.

MUKDEN, Sept. 23.—The Russians are using war balloons southeast of Mukden for the purpose of observing the movements of the Japanese in that direction. The line of outposts established by the Japanese is so effective that not even the Chinese have been able to penetrate it.

It is impossible, therefore, to say definitely how Marquis Oyama has disposed his forces. It is believed that Gen. Kuroki's army stretches from Pensihu to Bentsiaputze, and the armies of Gens. Oku and Nodzu from Yen-Tai, along the high road and railroad, to Shahepu, sixteen miles south of Mukden, while a fourth army is moving from Dziantchan across the Da Mountains. All these roads converge at Mukden.

Of the four armies, those of Oku and Nodzu are nearest Mukden, and their progress will have to be slackened in order to permit Kuroki and the flanking columns time to come up.

Meanwhile Oku and Nodzu have command of the railroad. Supplies of grain and ammunition are carried from Yen-Tai over heavy roads, and are exposed to capture by enterprising Cossack raiders.

There has been an improvement in the weather at Mukden, which is of great help to the Japanese.

The military authorities here continue to express the belief that a battle will be fought near Mukden within a few days, but the Chinese profess confidence that active hostilities are remote.

Japanese Report on Fights.

TOKIO, Sept. 23.—An official telegram reports that fights occurred at the towns of Tae-Ling and San-lung-Ku, sixty miles northeast of Liao-Yang, on Sept. 20. The dispatch says:

"Our detachment advanced through Heiniu-Chwang on Sept. 20 and attacked the enemy, consisting of one company of infantry, some cavalry, and a machine gun, stationed at Tae-Ling, and a battalion of infantry, 500 cavalry, six quick-firing and one machine gun, stationed at San-lung-Ku, which lies eight miles north of Tie-Ling.

"The Russians, who were driven off to the northward, left nineteen dead behind them. We captured some spoils. Our losses were very slight."

LONDON, Saturday, Sept. 24.—The Morning Post thinks it is impossible precisely to locate the large Japanese force that is endeavoring to turn Gen. Kuropatkin's left because Ta-Ling, (Ta Pass,) which means literally "Great Pass," is a term applied to numerous ridges and passes in Manchuria.

The paper, however, supposes that Kuroki's immediate objective may be the coal mines of Fu-Shun, which must be south of the Hun River, because the prejudices of the people of Mukden are strongly against mining on the north bank of the river for fear of disturbing the sleeping dragon that is supposed to inhabit the range of mountains stretching eastward from Mukden toward Kirin.

JAPANESE SEIZE BRITISH SHIP.

Stop Steamer Crusader in Tsugaru Strait and Take Her to Hakodate.

LONDON, Saturday, Sept. 24.—The correspondent at Kobe of The Daily Express, telegraphing yesterday, says that Japanese have stopped the British steamer Crusader in the Tsugaru Straits and have taken her to Hakodate.

AMERICAN STEAMER SEIZED.

Canadian Government Vessel Charges Poaching on Fisheries.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Sept. 23.—The American steamer Alert of Bellingham and two large scows, one of them loaded with salmon and $1,000 worth of nets, were seized by the Ruth, a Dominion Government fisheries protection steamer. The value of the property seized is about $15,000.

The authorities allege that the American boat was poaching on fisheries 125 miles from the American boundary. The seized steamer has been brought into this port.

BIG ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS.

Spectacle Last Night the Finest Witnessed in Ten Years.

NAPLES, Sept. 23.—Vesuvius is becoming very active.

The crust around the crater has broken away and produced magnificent flurries of redhot ashes and sparks of fire, which rise occasionally in immense columns to a height of 700 feet. They are accompanied by loud detonations and slight earthquakes, the sound resembling a bombardment by artillery.

The eruption to-night was the most spectacular witnessed in the last ten years. A great stream of lava was discharged, threatening wide destruction.

The spectacle was witnessed by thousands of awe-struck people.

BOUND TO WIN A RACE.

James Farley Not Deterred by Hurts in Two Accidents at Malone.

Special to The New York Times.

MALONE, N. Y., Sept. 23.—James Farley, the much-talked-of strike breaker, had two narrow escapes from serious injury at the Malone Fair races to-day. In the second heat of the 2:10 pace race he collided with Marchwood. The sulkys were wrecked. Farley, with great presence of mind, jumped to the back of his horse, Cyclone, but was unable to hold on and was thrown head first to the track.

He was picked up and was able to enter the next race, in which, however, his horse took a header and Farley was more or less injured. Notwithstanding this he drove another of his string, Redline, to victory in the 2:25 trot, which was next on the card.

WOMAN WITH A WHIP.

Attacked Young Woman at Restaurant Door—No Police.

A young woman came out of the Pabst Palm Garden on West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street shortly before 6 o'clock last evening. A woman with a whip was evidently waiting for her on the sidewalk. As soon as the young woman made her appearance in the doorway, the other one walked up to her, pulling a rawhide from under her jacket.

"You stole my husband; now take that, and that, and that, and that, and that." Each "that" was accompanied with a smart crack of the whip, and the whipper did not seem to car whether the blows fell upon the face of her victim or not.

The women were parted finally by a man who came from the restaurant. He seized the beaten woman by the arm and put her into an automobile. In doing so he received several slashes of the whip himself.

The woman with the whip remained on the sidewalk for a couple of minutes, exhausted by her labors. She left without divulging her identity. No policeman was near.

DEPEW CRACKS A NEW JOKE.

Tells Story on Himself in Connection with Cobleskill Political Meeting.

Special to The New York Times.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Sept. 23.—The fact that Senator Depew has a brand new joke was disclosed by him to a number of friends who accompanied him from Oneonta to Afton on his private car yesterday. During Senator Depew's last speaking trip over the Delaware and Hudson Railroad he was greeted by a large unsympathetic crowd at Cobleskill, and when he was conveyed to the Town Hall and attempted to address the gathering he was rudely interrupted. In referring to the incident yesterday Senator Depew said:

"I think I offended the crowd at Cobleskill on that occasion by saying to them during the brief interval that I could make my voice heard that they were trying to interfere with free speech and that they were using the same weapon that Samson used against the Philistines.

"'That's a lie!' shouted one man in the crowd; 'it wasn't Samson; it was Schley.'"

$90,000 ON NEW YORK RESULT.

Representing a business man who does not care to make a bet, but who believes that New York will cast its Electoral vote for Roosevelt and Fairbanks, I offer $90,000 even that the Republican Electors for the State of New York will be elected.

There were no changes in the odds yesterday. Money on the National election was wagered at 10 to 4, at which figures $2,000 were placed. W. C. Neefus and Bunnel, Buchanan & Co. took the Roosevelt end, and A. Sartorius & Co. and J. J. Judge put up the Parker money. There was more money on Parker at these odds, but the other side insisted on 2 to 1.

Frank C. Mulcahy, clerk at the Hoffman House, has a commission of $2,000, which he offered last night at evens that Roosevelt would carry New York. He also has a second commission which he offered of a like sum to be wagered against $1,000 that Roosevelt would be elected President. Neither was covered during the evening.

Mormons After Land in Mexico.

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Texas, Sept. 23.—Bishop W. W. Cluff of the Mormon Church at Salt Lake has arrived in Mexico, charged with the mission of purchasing large tracts of land upon which Mormon colonies will be established. He will examine lands situated in the southern part of that country. Several thousand Mormons will be sent from the United States.

GRAND ASSAULT BEGUN AROUND PORT ARTHUR

Japanese Army Launched at Forts; Desperate Fighting.

BIG FLEET AIDS THE ATTACK.

Rain of Shell Upon the Garrison—Message Reaches the Czar—Fortress's Fall Feared.

PARIS, Saturday, Sept. 24.—The Matin's St. Petersburg correspondent telegraphs as follows:

"Telegrams of which the General Staff has as yet no knowledge reached the Emperor at 4 o'clock this morning. I can affirm that they concern Port Arthur, regarding which place the greatest anxiety prevails at Court.

"The Japanese are now engaged in a general assault, which is more furious than its predecessors, attacking the town on three sides simultaneously and employing their whole forces, being determined to finish the business.

Russian mines blew up whole battalions.

"Gen. Fock especially distinguished himself, directing the fire from the wall, which the Japanese reached after indescribable massacre.

"The whole of Admiral Togo's and Vice Admiral Kamimura's squadrons are aiding the struggle, which, it is feared here, will be final.

The besieged forces are fighting as in a furnace. A perfect storm of shell is falling on the town, port, and fortress from the whole hill and roadstead.

"Gen. Stoessel is going from fort to fort, encouraging the defenders in their desperate efforts.

"In St. Petersburg the tragic event, which perhaps will terminate by a glorious fall of Port Arthur, is wholly unknown. At Court hope has not yet been entirely abandoned."

TSING-TAU, Sept. 23.—A Russian naval officer here has received official advices that cholera has appeared at Port Arthur.

Up to Sept. 19 there were only a few cases, but there were grave fears that the disease would become epidemic.

ATTACHE PRAISES JAPANESE.

Nicholson Says Foreigners Have Been Treated with Great Courtesy.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOKIO, Sept. 23.—Gen. Sir William Nicholson, (one of the British attachés with the Japanese Army in the field,) who has returned to Japan owing to sickness, emphatically denies the stories of illiberal treatment of foreign military attachés by the Japanese Staff.

Sir William declares that it would have been impossible to show greater courtesy, to have granted larger facilities, or to have reposed fuller confidence.

Gen. Nicholson expresses the highest appreciation of the skill of the Russian military engineers. He considers the capture by the Japanese of the Liao-Yang intrenchments an extraordinary feat of arms.

COAL ABSOLUTE CONTRABAND.

Russia Adheres to Her Original Position—Concession on Food Only.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 23.—The present status of the negotiations between Russia and the United States and Great Britain concerning contraband of war is that foodstuffs alone have been formally declared conditional contraband.

Russia has notified Great Britain that she has no intention of departing from her original view that coal is absolute contraband. At the same time, it is understood that Foreign Minister Lamsdorff has given to Sir Charles Hardinge, the British Ambassador, a verbal assurance of Russia's desire to apply the rule with the greatest leniency. The same assurance applies to all articles of dual use enumerated in Article VI. of Russia's declaration on contraband.

The report that the commission appointed to consider the question of contraband held an extraordinary meeting yesterday and declared cotton, coal, and iron to be contraband, as announced by a news agency in London yesterday, is incorrect. The commission has not held a session since the departure of Prof. de Martens, its President, for Edinburgh, to attend the meeting of the Institute of International Law.

RUSSIAN RESERVISTS FLEE.

Many Jews at Odessa Fail to Respond to Call to Colors.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 23.—It is now said that the disturbances which occurred at Odessa last week were not anti-Jewish, but anti-military, and that they were caused by the Reserve men, who, it is alleged, refused to go to the Far East.

A detachment of regular troops sent to suppress the disturbances is said to have refused to obey orders.

Fifty per cent. of the Jewish Reserve men at Odessa have eluded the call to the colors by going abroad or transferring their domicile to neighboring provinces where there is no mobilization. The total number of Reserve men called out in the Odessa City district was 17,000, of whom 4,000 Jews and 800 Christians did not respond. The places of the missing Jews have been filled up by Christians.

The mobilization led to rioting at Bielostokoff. About 125 drunken Reservists wrecked a few wineshops and then private residences. The rioters were arrested without bloodshed.

A slight Jewish riot is reported to have occurred at Shpola, Province of Kieff. The details have not yet been received.

BRITISH SHIPS DOG RAIDER?

Two Cruisers Arrive at Las Palmas, Where the Terek Put In.

LAS PALMAS, Canary Islands, Sept. 23.—The British cruisers St. George and Brilliant arrived here and anchored this morning.

The Russian cruiser Terek, which began coaling here yesterday, but was ordered to leave Las Palmas, following instructions received from Madrid, sailed at noon today. Her destination is not known.

A Las Palmas dispatch, dated Sept. 22, said that the Terek, which had been stopping British vessels in the vicinity of Gibraltar, had begun coaling there, but that, on instructions received from Madrid, she had been ordered to leave Las Palmas.

Her commander replied that he was unable to put to sea, owing, to his vessel's engines needing repairs. The cruiser, however, was forbidden to take on board any more coal or any water or stores.

VOLUNTEER RAIDERS' RETURN.

SUEZ, Sept. 23.—The Russian auxiliary cruisers Petersburg and Smolensk arrived here to-day.

The two cruisers subsequently entered the canal, bound for Port Said, after receiving a communication from the Russian Consul.

The Petersburg and the Smolensk are the Russian vessels which were met Sept. 6 within the three-mile limit of Zanzibar by the British cruiser Forte, which transmitted to them the orders of the Russian Government to cease interfering with neutral commerce.

Denies That Gen. Stoessel Is a Jew.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 23.—Reports in the foreign press that Lieut. Gen. Stoessel, the commander of the Russian military forces at Port Arthur, is of Jewish descent are denied by his niece, residing in St. Petersburg. Gen. Stoessel's grandfather was a Lutheran, a General in the Russian army, and played a conspicuous part in repelling the Napoleonic invasion. His father was converted to orthodoxy and also served in the army.

Japan Welcomes Tibet Treaty.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOKIO, Sept. 23.—The Japanese press regards the British success in Tibet as a new guarantee of the security of China against Russian aggression and as an extension of the policy of the open door.

HAS FATHER-IN-LAW ARRESTED.

Now Must Pay Prisoner's Board Till Court in Greenwich Opens.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Sept. 23.—Charles Pugsley, an evangelist, was arrested to-day in an action for damages to the extent of $2,000 for injuries inflicted upon his son-in-law, Thomas Wilson, last month, when a family row took place over stories circulated concerning Pugsley's son.

Pugsley kicked his son-in-law all over the floor and fled to Nebraska, believing that he had killed him, as he came near doing. When he found out that Wilson was alive, he returned and was fined $35, although the Judge said he would have sent him to jail but for his large family.

Now that Pugsley's body is attached, he must be kept at the expense of Wilson until court opens on Oct. 4, and if Pugsley takes the poor debtor's oath, as it is believed he will, Wilson will be still further out of pocket. Pugsley's keeper, who is Constable Mitchell, says he will present Pugsley with the money he receives from Wilson as bondsman for the board.

NAIL VICTIM TO TABLE.

Chatham Square Roughs Drug Stableman and Fasten Him Down.

Patrick Monoghan, thirty years old, a stableman of 1,085 Second Avenue, walked into the reception room at Bellevue Hospital last night in a critical condition. He told a remarkable story of having been nailed to a table in the rear room of a saloon in Chinatown, and the hospital authorities believe his story is true. Capt. McHale, the night Superintendent of the hospital, notified the police, and they have started an investigation.

Monoghan said he was at Chatham Square and the Bowery about midnight Thursday, when he met five or six young men. One of them proposed that they have a drink. He says they went into the rear room of a neighboring saloon, and a round of drinks was ordered. He took whisky, and remembered nothing until he awoke in a roughly furnished room several hours later and found himself fastened to a table. A horseshoe nail had been driven through the calf of his leg and through the table. Monoghan tugged at the nail, and found it to be very tight. He was near the edge of the table, and, reaching his arm under, found that it had been clinched on the under side. Monoghan was still in a semi-stupor, but managed to draw the nail out of the table and release himself. The nail was still bent, and he was afraid to remove it from the flesh. When he appeared at the hospital it was still in his leg, but a hospital physician removed it without difficulty. Later Monoghan told the hospital authorities that the gang had stolen from him a silver watch and $20 in bills. He does not remember the exact location of the place where he woke up.

ADVERTISING MEN'S DINNER.

Publicity's Works and Needs Pointed Out by Speakers.

The Board of Directors of the International Advertising Association, men who in themselves control the annual expenditure of $25,000,000 for the achieving of publicity and promotion, last night held their first annual dinner at the Manhattan Hotel.

The object of the organization is the fostering of the advertisers' interests throughout the world, the reformation of abuses, the prevention of waste in the advertising methods, and the common advancement of the advertising profession by co-operative and protective measures.

Charles Arthur Carlisle of South Bend, Ind., President of the association, acted as toastmaster.

"We gather here to-night," he said, "as history makers, as the forerunners of the mediums of international publicity and promotion, by which American commerce is to advance to greater fields of activity. Advertising has been a potent factor in making America what it is. As the mouthpiece of the National Association of manufacturers we will be on the firing line."

Among the speakers were Philip A. Conne, Ben D. Hampton, who spoke for "Trademark Laws That Mean Something"; James L. Stewart, James Gibson, who suggested the establishment of a parcels post; Herman Ridder, J. Adams Thayer, Lucien Swift, James McManus, Mr. Fredericks, and Barron G. Collier.

The association will meet in convention in St. Louis on Oct. 4, 5, and 6. Its officers are: President—Charles Arthur Carlisle; First Vice President—W. C. Steigers, St. Louis; Second Vice President—C. H. Brampton, Chicago; Third Vice President—Barney Link, Brooklyn; Treasurer—E. J. Ridgway, New York; Secretary—Barron G. Collier, New York; Assistant Secretary—Edwin J. Seward, Worcester, Mass.

REPUBLICAN SQUEEZE OF FEDERAL EMPLOYES

Secretary Woodson Has Letter Sent to Kentucky Man.

STATUTE IGNORED OR EVADED

Kentucky Republican "Expected" $70 in His Letter—The Free Delivery Men Asked to Help.

According to Secretary Urey Woodson of the Democratic National Committee, the Republican Party managers in Kentucky are deliberately violating the orders of the Federal Civil Service Commission, as well as the provisions of the Federal civil service act in assessing postal clerks and other employes of the rural free delivery system.

Secretary Woodson says that letters asking for money are being sent to the employes of the rural free delivery department of Kentucky by the Republican State Campaign Committee. He says he has one of the letters in his possession, and that it is written on official letterheads of the committee of which Richard P. Ernst is Chairman. George W. Long is given as Chairman of the Finance Committee of the State Committee. According to Mr. Woodson, the letter is under date of Louisville, Ky., Aug. 29, and is as follows:

"By special arrangement the National Committee permits this committee to receive and retain all contributions which friends of the Republican Party in Kentucky may wish to make. The list of contributors, with the amounts given, will be forwarded to Mr. Cortelyou, to be filed with the records of the National Committee.

"The position you hold in the party shows your active interest in its principles and policies and your desire for its success. We therefore confidently expect aid from you and hope to receive a liberal contribution for the legitimate purpose only of paying the expenses of our organization, speakers, and the distribution of literature. We trust your contribution will not be less than $70.

"The arrogant trusts which began to exert a depressing influence on legitimate business during Mr. Cleveland's Administration and whose unlawful encroachments have been checked by the strong hand of President Roosevelt, now seeing that Mr. Cleveland's faction of the Democratic Party is in control, and knowing their friendly interests, have joined forces with them in an effort to punish President Roosevelt and the Republican Party for standing for the rights of the people. It is even boasted of as a virtue by Democratic papers that Judge Parker will have a campaign fund of five million dollars, subscribed nominally by these trusts, but finally to be squeezed from the people.

"A prompt response is respectfully requested. Very truly,

"G. W. LONG."

Mr. Woodson also gave out a copy of a communication which he says was addressed to the heads of all Government departments on Aug. 25 by President John C. Black of the Civil Service Commission. In this letter the President says the Civil Service Commission requests that heads of departments forward to all nominating and appointing officials in the Government service copies of a circular "warning against political assessments and partisan activity of office holders," directing such officers to post the circulars in conspicuous places in their offices.

President Black's circular contained a copy of the civil service act of Jan. 16, 1883, making political assessments of Federal officers and employes a misdemeanor. It provides that no person in the Government service is obliged to contribute to any political fund or to render any political service.

FAIRBANKS IN CHICAGO.

Secretary Shaw There, Too, Pleased with Outlook in West.

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—Senator Fairbanks arrived in Chicago to-day on his way to the Pacific Coast. He spent the day in conference with Republican leaders in this city preparatory to starting on his Western tour to-night.

Secretary Shaw arrived from the West during the day and left later for Indiana in extension of his campaign tour. He speaks confidently of Republican prospects in the West.

HIGGINS WILL SPEAK.

Advised to Stump State — Republican Orators Swarm Here.

Lieut. Gov. Higgins, the Republican nominee for Governor, returned to the city last night. He denied the report that he had decided to make no speeches in the campaign. James S. Whipple, the Secretary of the Senate, who was one of the managers of the campaign for Mr. Higgins at Saratoga, said last night that his advice to Mr. Higgins would be to stump the State.

"If he will take my advice," said Mr. Whipple, "Mr. Higgins will go into every county of the State. I believe he has much to gain by showing himself to the people and giving them some of those plain business talks of which he is capable. My suggestion to the State Committee will be that Mr. Higgins, M. Linn Bruce, the nominee for Lieutenant Governor, and Job Hedges be sent through the State together. They would make a well-balanced trio."

The announcement of some important Republican meetings was made last night. There will be a big meeting in Brooklyn on Oct. 24, which will be addressed by Secretary of War Taft. Other dates which have been made for Secretary Taft in the State are: Oct. 27, Syracuse; Oct. 28, Rochester; Oct. 29, Buffalo. Leslie M. Shaw, Secretary of the Treasury, will speak in Oswego on Oct. 10, in Ogdensburg on Oct. 11, and in Watertown on Oct. 12. Ex-Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith will speak at Syracuse on Oct. 6. At the same meeting John Barrett, Minister to Panama, will be a speaker.

Job E. Hedges is to be the principal speaker at a meeting to be held in Princeton, N. J., Oct. 15.

The bringing of so many orators of National prominence into this State by the Republicans is causing a good deal of comment.

JERSEY MAY HEAR CLEVELAND.

Member Republican Committee Comes Out for Democratic Ticket.

Announcement that was said to be authoritative was made yesterday by friends of Charles C. Black, the Democratic candidate for Governor in New Jersey, that ex-President Grover Cleveland had agreed to make two speeches for the National and State tickets in New Jersey next month. The places and dates are yet to be arranged.

Hudson County Republicans are much surprised at John A. Landrine's public advocacy of the election of Mr. Black. Mr. Landrine is a member of the Republican County Committee, and was a delegate to the State Convention that last week named ex-Senator Stokes for Governor. An attempt will be made to expel him from the County Committee at its meeting next week.

State Republicans are also criticising the telegram of congratulation sent to Mr. Black by First Assistant Postmaster General William M. Johnson of Bergen County, in which he expressed regret that his political affiliations would prevent him from voting for Mr. Black, but declaring his belief that "the State will be safe" in Mr. Black's hands. Mr. Johnson presided at the convention that put Mr. Stokes in nomination.

MILES TO SPEAK FOR PARKER.

Chairman Taggart Arranging Six Weeks' Lively Campaigning.

Chairman Taggart of the Democratic Committee is completing arrangements for a whirlwind speaking campaign in the six weeks before election day. When ex-Senator Hill comes to town to-day his speaking dates will be arranged. He will be heard in West Virginia and probably Indiana, besides his appointments in this State.

Senator Culberson of Texas will speak in Baltimore on Sept. 28 and will spend most of October in West Virginia and Indiana.

Lieut. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, retired, was a visitor at headquarters yesterday, and upon leaving announced that he would make several speeches. He would dwell, he said, on two subjects chiefly—the Philippines and the General Army Staff.

"We lowered the flag when it floated over the palace of the Montezumas in Mexico, and with honor," he said, "and we lowered the flag in Cuba, and that was not with any dishonor. The same can be done in the Philippines."

Gen. Miles said he would oppose the establishment of the General Army Staff on the ground that it is not capable of doing the work mapped out for the Commanding General under the former system.

GOV. DURBIN SEES TAGGART.

Indiana Republican Causes Shock at Democratic Headquarters.

There was something of a flurry at Democratic National Headquarters yesterday when Gov. Durbin of Indiana walked in. The Governor is a close personal friend of Chairman Taggart and called on him.

"Well, Durbin, have you come into our fold?" asked Mr. Taggart.

"Just ran in to look you over, Tom," he said, "and not to discuss the situation in Indiana while I am here. Down at Republican Headquarters I told the people that you could not win in Indiana."

QUIET ASSEMBLY CONVENTIONS

Brooklyn Republicans Nominate in Nineteen Districts—One Italian Running.

The Republicans named candidates for the Assembly in nineteen of the twenty-one Assembly Districts of Kings County last night. In two districts the making of nominations was deferred. The conventions, for the most part, were not marked by any unusual excitement or incident, there being but few contests for places on the ticket, and none of these important ones. A nomination which was taken as indicating that the Italian-born citizen was coming to the front in politics in Brooklyn was that of Gaetano Parisi in the Second District.

There is a comparatively large Italian vote in this district, which Parisi will hustle to land in the hope of overcoming the big Democratic majority. Assemblyman Jacob D. Remsen, against whose renomination it was expected a hard fight would be made in the Eighteenth District, won out without great difficulty.

The candidates, by districts, are as follows:

RENOMINATED.

SCIENTISTS VISIT EDISON.

Distinguished Foreigners of World's Fair Party Inspect Inventor's Laboratory.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST ORANGE, N. J., Sept. 23.—Thomas A. Edison, the inventor, yesterday afternoon entertained about one hundred representative electrical engineers and scientists of Great Britain at his laboratory in West Orange. Accompanying the Britons were several members of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers.

One of the most interested visitors was the Hon. M. Hayashi of Tokio, Japan, a son of Baron Hayashi, the Japanese Ambassador to England. Assisting Mr. Edison in receiving were Mrs. John R. Schermerhorn, Miss Edith Edison, a niece of the inventor, and Mrs. Walter S. Mallory. A light lunch was served before the party returned to New York.

SAYS CASSIDY IGNORED COURT.

Lawyer Gets Queens Borough President Summoned for Contempt.

President Cassidy of the Borough of Queens will be asked to appear before Justice Maddox in the Supreme Court, in Brooklyn, in a few days, and show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court.

Isaac G. Darrin appeared before Justice Maddox yesterday and said that as the attorney for George B. Clay, a real estate dealer, of 9 Jackson Avenue, Long Island City, he had recently obtained an order from the court, directing President Cassidy to have a lunch wagon removed from in front of Clay's premises. Mr. Cassidy, it was asserted, declined to pay any attention to the order, and since it was served Clay has received orders from the Street Cleaning Department to fence in a number of lots owned by him and his customers.

CARRUTHERS GOULD'S LETTER.

Leading English Caricaturist to Write and Draw for The New York Times.

Beginning to-morrow, Francis Carruthers Gould will contribute a weekly letter, illustrated in his own inimitable style, to THE NEW YORK TIMES. He has never before been engaged by an American newspaper.

Carruthers Gould, as he is generally known, is more than a caricaturist, more, even, than the leading caricaturist of England; he is a political force. It is recognized in England that his influence counts enormously; that he is at least as valuable as an orator of the first magnitude. He is never malicious, and even the statesmen whom he attacks can smile at his cartoons, but his genius for expressing a political situation in a few pencil lines is unequaled in Europe.

He is an opponent of Mr. Chamberlain's protectionist policy, and the free traders have reproduced his cartoons in The Westminster Gazette by the million, and have circulated them throughout the United Kingdom. If Chamberlain falls, Harcourt and Campbell-Bannerman will have done much to defeat him, but Carruthers Gould will have done more. The leaders of the Anti-Protectionist Party themselves realize this, and recently they paid Mr. Gould the unique compliment of a dinner in his honor, at which speeches were made expressing the gratitude of the free traders for his work.

Mr. Gould is a cartoonist because his genius had to express itself. For twenty years he was a member of the London Stock Exchange, amusing himself by drawing caricatures of brokers for private circulation, but he could not hide his light under a bushel, and at last he accepted an offer to contribute sketches to a newspaper. He was a constant contributor to The Pall Mall Gazette till W. W. Astor bought it, and since then has been employed by The Westminster Gazette.

SHEPARD AND MURPHY SEE JUSTICE HERRICK

Each Expresses His Satisfaction with the Ticket.

FRIENDS DEFEND NOMINEE

Deny That He Has Been Active in Politics Since His Accession to the Supreme Bench.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Sept. 23.—Justice Herrick's callers to-day included Edward M. Shepard of Brooklyn and Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany Hall, although these two men did not meet. Mr. Shepard and Judge Herrick have known each other for many years, and their meeting was very cordial. Mr. Shepard had been to his Summer home, at Lake George, and is on his way to New York City. Subsequently Mr. Shepard said:

"I congratulated Judge Herrick on his nomination and expressed my satisfaction at the result of the Democratic State Convention. The delegates could have done no better. They have nominated Judge Herrick, who is thoroughly equipped to undertake the administration of State affairs, and who, if elected, will perform his duty to the people of the State faithfully and intelligently. I believe that Democracy will be victorious in this campaign; that Judge Herrick will be the next Governor of New York, and that the Electoral vote of the Empire State will be given to Judge Parker."

"Do you propose to make any more speeches this campaign?" was asked.

"Oh, yes," responded Mr. Shepard, enthusiastically. "I shall do all in my power to benefit the candidacy of Judge Parker and Judge Herrick, and shall undoubtedly make a number of speeches in New York State."

Charles F. Murphy was accompanied to Albany by Senator Victor J. Dowling, John B. McDonald, John Doyle, and Thomas F. Conway of Plattsburg and New York City. The party came from Saratoga.

"We were resting out," said Mr. Murphy while he was at luncheon, "and now that everything is settled so far as the State candidates are concerned, we are going back to New York to begin work, first on registration and later to get out the largest vote possible for Parker and Herrick."

"You are satisfied with what you accomplished at Saratoga?"

"Perfectly," responded Mr. Murphy, smilingly. "Everything is lovely, and we will elect the Democratic ticket in November. The nomination of D. Cady Herrick was made by a united Democracy and makes harmony absolute and certain. The ticket nominated is high class from top to bottom, and will appeal to Democrats generally as well as to invite the support of young men. Francis Burton Harrison is one of New York City's most promising young statesmen, and his selection as a candidate for Lieutenant Governor gives great strength to the Democratic ticket. There is plenty of hard work ahead for the Democracy, and the leaders must buckle down to it immediately. There is no time to waste flattering ourselves on what we have done thus far. What is done from now on is what will count on the 8th of November."

In Judge Herrick's mail this morning came his letter, which pleased its recipient very much:

Cleveland, Ohio, Sept. 22, 1904.

Hon. D. Cady Herrick, nominee for Governor:

My Dear Sir: Congratulations. May you make a better Governor of New York than Ohio has.

Good for the Herricks.

I am the only Democratic Herrick in Ohio, except my son. I served as a Democrat in the Ohio Senate. Please accept my heartiest good wishes for yourself and family and success at the polls. Very truly yours, J. F. HERRICK.

Justice Herrick's friends here resent the charge that he has been active in politics since he went upon the Supreme Court bench. They say that Justice Herrick has not made a political speech in thirteen years, and has never conducted a political campaign, presided over a political gathering, or gone as a delegate to any convention. It is recalled that when he was elected Supreme Court Justice he made a speech to a party of serenaders as the successful candidate, and said then: "This is my last political speech." That he meant it is shown, his friends say, by an unblemished record of thirteen years.

He has even been so careful, they say, that when his old friends and political associates came to him with any political proposition which might have a termination in the courts he has declined to discuss it or give advice. That he has talked with his old political friends about politics, and when asked for his advice given it as friend to friend, is true, they admit, but they deny that he has at any time or under any circumstances directed a local or general political campaign since he went upon the bench.

Justice Herrick will preside at the opening of the court term to-morrow and will settle down to the disposition of all the cases before him, which fairly cover a big desk in his office. Justice Herrick is determined to do this that no litigant whose case has reached him may be obliged to submit to delay and prepare his case all over again, because of the fact that the Justice has been made the nominee of his party for Governor. He has not been informed of the date when he will be formally notified of his nomination, and he does not intend to go to New York or elsewhere until his office work is cleared off so that he can resign from the bench.

Charles F. Murphy, accompanied by Senator Victor J. Dowling and Thomas F. Conway of Plattsburg, is expected in the city this morning. All three have been resting at Saratoga since the State Convention. It was learned here last night that one of Mr. Murphy's objects in visiting Justice Herrick yesterday was to talk over the Brooklyn situation with the Judge and secure assurances that, as Governor, he would not take sides for or against Senator McCarren. He also wanted to see when Judge Herrick could come to New York to speak at a ratification meeting in Tammany Hall. The Wigwam will hold a general ratification of the entire ticket during the first week in October, if that time shall be satisfactory to the Gubernatorial candidate.

GROUT STILL IN POLITICS.

Controller Only Said He Wouldn't Have Present Office Again.

Controller Grout declared last night that the reports of his intention to retire from politics were absolutely untrue. He said:

"I never stated I was going to retire from politics, although I did say I would retire from the office of Controller at the close of my present term. I always shall take an active interest in politics as I always have done in the past, and I have promised to take the stump in the present campaign."

While the Controller was at the Hoffman House last night he met John B. Stanchfield, another defeated candidate for Governor. The two went into the café and sat down. Pretty soon along came William F. Sheehan, who more than any other man had blocked both the Stanchfield and the Grout booms. Mr. Sheehan looked at them a second and then walked over and shook hands.

Controller Grout will speak at the Claremont Avenue Rink, in Brooklyn, on Saturday night, when the State campaign in Brooklyn will be opened. John Sharpe Williams will also speak.

"YEGG" HOLD-UP MEN THEMSELVES HELD UP

THREE JUMPED AND ESCAPED

The Fourth Was Arrested — Had on Shoes Which He Had Got at Pistol's Point.

On a freight train going thirty miles an hour four detectives held up with revolvers four "yeggmen," or tramp highwaymen, who were in the act of going through the pockets of other tramps under the gentle persuasion of revolvers. Three of the "yeggmen" jumped off the train when it slacked up a bit and escaped. The fourth was arrested.

The "yeggmen" have been robbing cheap travelers on the New York Central freight trains for months.

State Agent McLane of the New York Central and Detectives Trojan, McGill, and George followed the four men to the Central yards, at Thirtieth Street and Twelfth Avenue yesterday, and when the "yeggs" got aboard the detectives concealed themselves in an empty freight car and watched the men.

When the train started the detectives boarded the top of the cars. The four "yeggs" crawled on top of the cars until they reached an empty coal car, and then they climbed down. In the car were about twenty men who had boarded the train. By the time that the detectives got to the car next to the coal car the four "yegg men" had cornered the rest of the men in the car, two of the men had pistols pointed at the crowd, and the other two were going through the men's pockets.

Trojan called the other detectives, and then the four officers drew their revolvers and ordered the four men to throw up their hands. The robbers were surprised and dropped their pistols. A brakeman was then called, and he was ordered to have the train stopped. Owing to the speed of the train the detectives were unable to get into the coal car. When the speed slackened three of the robbers climbed over the side of the car and jumped. The police were unable to follow them.

The fourth man was caught, and at One Hundred and Seventieth Street the train was brought to a standstill. The detectives arrested eight of the men who were stealing a ride. They were taken to the West One Hundred and Fifty-second Street Station.

The "yeggs" had taken $8 and a razor from one man, and had made another take off his shoes. The prisoner had on the shoes when arrested.

Lake Shore Strikers Resume Work.

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—The nine months' struggle of the machinists and boilermakers of the Chicago, Lake Shore and Eastern Railroad against a 10 per cent. wage reduction is at an end. The company announced that if the unions would call off their strikes it would reinstate as many men as possible at the lower wages. The result was a stampede of more than half of the 400 strikers.

SANDWICH, Mass., Sept. 23.—The heavy frost of the last thirty-six hours has ruined a large part of the cranberry crop which remained unharvested in this section of the State. About one-third of the crop had been housed, and of that remaining out one-half to two-thirds has been frozen. The frost was the heaviest ever known in this section in September.

Special Train's Race Against Time from Philadelphia to Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—F. M. Pease, railway supply manufacturer, raced against time from Philadelphia to Chicago last night and to-day and won. The stake was a $250,000 business deal which was hanging in the balance. Mr. Pease, whose company is the successor of the Chicago Car and Locomotive Works, won the stake, through the co-operation of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and incidentally broke a former running record of the twenty-hour train on the road by a few minutes.

The general officials of the Pennsylvania Company wired Chief Clerk Bixby of the Assistant General Passenger Agent's office in Chicago to meet the train at the Union Station. The telegram, which was received by Mr. Bixby at 9:20 o'clock this morning, announced that the special train was due to arrive at 1 o'clock this afternoon, but two minutes later the special train bearing Mr. Pease and his party steamed into the Union Station, having made the run from Philadelphia to Chicago in the remarkable time of 18 hours 14 minutes, covering a distance of 822 miles. The ordinary time for the fast regular trains is 18 hours 30 minutes.

The running time, leaving aside stops and periods when it was necessary to slow down, was at more than a mile-a-minute clip, and in many stretches spurts showed remarkable time. The last 150 miles from Fort Wayne to Chicago was made in 3 hours and 18 minutes. This included the slow running through cities and the low rate of speed from the city limits to the Union Station.

The Lake Shore Twentieth Century Limited and the corresponding train on the Pennsylvania before it was taken off were scheduled to make the run from New York to Chicago in twenty hours. The Lake Shore schedule is still for that time. The fast time between Philadelphia and New York is ninety minutes.

Mr. Pease paid over to the Pennsylvania Company $1,664.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 23.—While the exact nature of the deal that took Mr. Pease to Chicago is not definitely known in this city, it is said that the negotiations were mainly carried on here, where he and his family had been living in the Bellevue-Stratford. He had made complete arrangements to leave on Thursday's Chicago limited, but certain details of his business held him here beyond the time of departure of that train, while he regarded a successful issue of his plans as possible only through his being in Chicago not later than 1 o'clock this afternoon. None of the scheduled trains would answer.

At 3:30 o'clock Thursday he was asked by an official of the Pennsylvania Road's passenger department if he could be in readiness to leave half an hour later. He replied that he could, hastily packed what he needed for the trip, and with his wife and daughter at 4 o'clock boarded a special train consisting of a Pullman sleeper, a day car, and a locomotive. The crew was made up from that of the east-bound Chicago limited, which had pulled in a few minutes earlier.

TO RECOVER CONVICT'S LOSSES.

An Illinois Bank's Suit Against a Stock Brokerage Firm.

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—Suit was begun today against the stock brokerage firm of Tracy & Co. to recover $41,400, which, it is alleged, was lost by Francis B. Wright in speculations on margins with that concern. Wright is now in the Joliet Penitentiary under sentence on a charge of embezzling nearly $80,000 from the First National Bank of Dundee, Ill., of which he was Cashier. The bank is behind the suit.

This action is based on a law which entitles anybody to sue for the amount lost in speculating upon margins in case the person losing the money does not institute a suit for its recovery within six months from the time of loss.

CONEY'S MARDI GRAS OVER.

Record Crowd and Wide Open Island for Celebration's Last Night.

The final explosion in the Mardi-Gras Festival at Coney Island occurred last night. It was the wildest night the little "island by the sea" has ever seen, but nobody got hurt and arrests were far between.

The feature of the closing celebration was a "wild race" from West Twenty-fifth Street to Concourse Park. A cable car, an elephant, a camel, a white man on foot, a colored brother on foot, a man on a bicycle, an automobile, and a girl on horseback took part. The distance was a mile. It had been very carefully planned in advance and came off without a hitch. The cable car got out of gear early in the game, the elephant jumped the track, the camel went on strike, the white man and the negro started a race riot before they had run ten yards, the automobile got a violent attack of cramps in the first furlong, and the bike got an attack of lumbago about the same time. Consequently the girl on horseback came out in front, though she had been contending against fearful odds, and everybody was happy. The young lady who won was Miss Adele Van Ohl of Plainfield, N. J., nineteen years old and pretty.

After the race the big dance hall at Dreamland was thrown open to the immense throng for the coronation of the King and Queen of Mardi Gras. It was crammed when the grand march, with which the coronation opened, was organized. In the grand march were many strange creatures—giants and midgets, Hindus and Indians, and howling dervishes who at times helped the music out considerably.

Every place on Coney Island was wide open and everybody on the island took part in last night's final ceremonies with the exception of the infants from the incubator show, who slept through it all.

POSTUM.

LIKE A FLASH

Came a Hard Knock From Coffee.

It's a simple matter to satisfy sensible, thinking people by a 10 days' trial of Postum in place of coffee, for if it is coffee causes the illness, an almost immediate change takes place. The old coffee ails, sluggishness, insomnia, lack of energy, stomach troubles, sallow skin, headaches, and all the others, whatsoever form the nerves decide upon, when they are thrown out of balance by coffee, begin to leave, and it's only a question of a short time when Postum will end them all and bring back health.

"I had drank coffee every morning in and out of season until two years ago, when all of a sudden my stomach rebelled, and shortly thereafter I became a nervous wreck, couldn't eat a bite without intense suffering. I lost most all my flesh and was practically starving because I couldn't get any good out of what little food I did eat.

"One morning when in this wretchedly run down condition I read a magazine article about Postum Food Coffee, and the case seemed so much like mine I sent out and got a package. At that time almost nothing would stay on my stomach, but the first cup of Postum wife made for me seemed to warm and nourish me clear to my finger tips, and this delightful glow of well-fed feeling continued. For the first five or six days the Postum was all I could keep on my stomach or even take at all without great suffering, but I got better so fast I added other foods gradually, and kept gaining strength and flesh, until now I can eat a hearty meal and really enjoy life once more. I know it was Postum that saved me from starving to death when my stomach had been ruined by coffee.

"I know lots of folks don't make Postum right, but it takes only 15 minutes boiling to make it perfect, according to the directions. Then it's better than the best coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ten days' trial of Postum proves whether or not it's the coffee hurts you.

The Czar thanked them in accepting their services and wrote that he hoped their wishes would be fully realized.

It was afterward said that it was a "slip of the pen."

Out to-day "God's Good Man" Marie Corelli's New Book

"JUST a simple love story," as the gifted author puts it, but it's more—it's the strongest piece of modern fiction that's been produced in a decade. Not one of those thrilling, pedantic stories that savors of the modern society novel, but a high-minded story with a powerful theme and characters that speak and act natural.

The story is laid in rural England and has for many of its characters those quaint and interesting country folk that not only amuse one, but teach that the highest type of manhood and womanhood does not travel in royal raiments.

The Rev. John Walden—who is "God's Good Man"—is a distinctive character, the prototype of which is not furnished in any other work of fiction, except, perhaps, it be John Halifax, Gentleman.

It's a voluminous book—some 525 pages—but just the sort of book a bibliophile would love to read and add to his or her collection.

As usual the author flays the English Aristocracy and shows up their shortcomings, but that's not the interesting part of the book—it's the sparkling dialogue—the droll sayings of the rural English characters—and above all, the overpowering portrayal of John Walden's love for Miss Vancourt, a young woman, and rich, whose only dream throughout life has been her desire to love and be loved.

Women's $5 sample hats priced to-day at $1.75.

WE DO not as a rule sell sample hats, but one of the cleverest of New York's ready-to-wear manufacturers came to us and wanted us to take his sample line—thought it was only fair to offer them to us first because we buy more ready-to-wear hats from him than any other store in America.

Because they were such a handsome line of hats and because the price was so absurdly low we bought them—that's why you buy these $2.95 to $5 hats to-day at $1.75.

There are both ready-to-trim and stiff trimmed hats—in the lot—hats which you will voluntarily admit are easily worth $5—while they last—at..... $1.75

Men's and women's regular $15 watches to-day at $7.50

EARLY in the Summer we held a similar sale and the lot was sold before the day was half over. We're better prepared this time, though.

Main Floor.

We guarantee these watches to be accurate timekeepers—special factory price concession makes this Saturday sale possible.

Women's solid gold open face watch—plain case, fitted with a fully guaranteed Swiss movement—the case is solid gold, and is worth what we ask for the watch complete—we bought 500 at half, and are going to sell them while they last at $7.50

Men's 16 size open face watch—plain and engine turned case, fitted with one of the foremost American movements, fully guaranteed by the makers to keep accurate time—while they last, to-day, at $7.50

$2 solid gold cuff links, $1.25: $2 is the regular bargain price of these handsome solid gold cuff links; numerous designs to select from—only a limited quantity—while they last, $1.25

The "Regis," $2.

WE'RE not ashamed to come to smart dressers with a direct and forceful argument in favor of these new styles and shapes because (although our prices are but $2 and $3..) they have every style attribute of the latest $4 or $5 models—every line and curve that has been deemed correct for the new season.

Second Floor.

Men who have been paying $4 and $5 will (when they see these hats) see how utterly absurd it is to spend an extra dollar or two when satisfaction (measured by their critical taste.....) is possible in the expenditure of $2 or $3.

Every hat we're showing at $2 and $3 is made of an excellent quality of felt—it is hand finished, well leathered, and the trimmings are the best.

Complete showing of boys' hats and caps—new styles—50c. to $1.45.

YOU know it's an unusual thing to offer gloves of this kind at this price at this time of year—gloves that are right up-to-the-minute in style and identical with those you would have to pay $1 and $1.35 for—here at 69c.

Men's one clasp Dogskin real cape, genuine mocha suede, silk lined and unlined, pique and Pxm sewn. Absolutely new Fall styles—in tan, new greys and browns—a high grade glove positively worth $1 to $1.35—at 69c.

Don't need to say much about these gloves—the name Fisk, Clark & Flagg tells the story of their worth.

Main Floor.

49c for children's warm flannelette dresses—platts with deep hem—yoke, collar and sleeves trimmed with ribbon—6 months to 3 years.

The new storm coat reigns supreme.

Third Floor.

The storm coat has gained marked popularity this season on account of the extremely smart effects that have been produced. High authorities have disposed of the very last objection to this popular garment for its appearance on all occasions—not only for a morning wrap or on informal occasions, but for all occasions.

Owing to the tremendous sale of this garment, the celebrated rain-proof fabrics have become very scarce. We have secured all the available fabrics from foreign and New York markets and turned them over to our makers of fine garments to produce in varied models of this season's fancies, embracing the new blouse effect as well as many styles in semi-fitted with a touch of broadcloth or braid trimming, in the beautiful shades of tan, olive and oxford. We place on sale for to-day about 300 coats—the first received—at strictly popular prices.

$10.00 $16.75 $18.75 $14.75

$1.65 for women's regular 2.50 and 3.50 shoes.

AT $1.65 you can buy to-day shoes that are in every respect fit to become a part of your new Fall costume—whether for street or dress. They are bona fide 2.50 and 3.50 shoes—although a little above the average made to sell at those prices. They are a cancelled order from a famous Cincinnati manufacturer who parted with them at a great sacrifice.

The very latest shapes are included—a diversity of correct styles from which you cannot choose amiss—to-day will end the sale at $1.65.

Second Floor.

The Wanamaker Store.

Store Closes at 5:30 P. M.

A Great Store's Place In the Life of the Community

Come and look at the busy, enthusiastic throngs that fill the aisles these Autumn days. See the earnest, eager way in which these multitudes are seeking the things they need. The whole world has a work of preparation to go through for the coming season, and the modern retail store is one of the necessities of this great public service.

There is something beside the mere turning of dollars for the store. There is something beside mere pastime for the shoppers. The casual observer is likely to make light of the intentions of one, and the efforts of the other. The profit on the investment is, of course, the inducement for capital to undertake the great labor of distributing the world's products, but aside from the mere matter of profits, and wage-earning, here are thousands of brains realizing that their life work consists in being of service to the great general public.

While a store is not a producer, in the primary sense, it is as necessary to the distribution of the world's products as the labor that plants the seed, spins the cotton, or fashions the apparel.

The great success of the modern retail institution has come because every point of the work is undertaken seriously; scientific methods have been applied to systemizing this great public service, making it run so smoothly that the casual observer would not realize the vastness of the undertaking.

Today, in WANAMAKER'S, you see but the inner circle, where every needed thing is handed to you ready for use. The outer circles touch the shores of every civilized land, and every mill and factory where the arm of toil and the hand of skill have produced the things you need.

Ready-to-Wear HATS For Women and Girls

We have ready today a splendid variety of these Hats, all ready to put on. The collection excels anything we have shown heretofore.

No two are exactly alike. Prices range from $1.75 to $10.

Then we are also showing a fine assortment of black and colored Hats, almost ready-to-wear. They are made of velvet, chenille, fancy braids and silk; a touch of trimming converts them into pretty dress hats. Prices, $2.50 to $7.

There is also a most complete assortment of Untrimmed Hats, of beaver and felt, in all the wanted colors, including black and white; at $1.25 to $5.

You Want That New Suit Today, Of Course

These crisp, fine Autumn days are hurrying men after their new Fall Suits, for the light Summer suit is out of date—a man looks badly, and feels worse, until he gets his new one. We are ready with a splendid stock. The handsome new browns are in highest favor, and we have them in a multitude of varieties covering practically every new style that has been brought out.

Here are Single and Double-breasted Sack Suits, made of stylish cheviots in brown and gray mixtures, as well as hard-twisted worsteds, in neat gray effects, which so many men prefer. Prices, $15 to $35 a suit, with particularly handsome assortments at $20 and $25.

For Young Men of fifteen to twenty years, we are showing a very fine collection of Double-breasted Sack Suits of fancy cheviots, in new brown and gray mixtures, at $12 and $15 a suit.

There is style, character, and betterness about WANAMAKER Clothing that makes it important for men and boys to see what we are showing before buying elsewhere; and there is a saving on the price which is quite worth while.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Men's Black Neckties That Won't Crock

There's a lot of importance in that headline. It means that a man who wears black neckties, occasionally or habitually, can at last buy a kind that will not leave a memento on collar or white shirt in the shape of a black smudge or streak.

We have had these Neckties made up exclusively for us, from black silk that we guarantee not to crock. Every scarf displays this guarantee—which means your money back if you aren't satisfied—upon a band around it, and on the outside of the neat package in which each scarf is put up separately.

There are two widths of the four-in-hands, and six varieties of fast black silk to choose from—barathea, peau de soie, grosgrain, satin, herringbone and rep; so that every man's taste may be suited.

Stetson Hats

Easy to Buy
Easy to Wear

We emphasize the "easy-to-buy" part, for we know that men will come in today from all around New York, to get their Feather-weight and Self-conforming Stetson Derby Hats—they've been doing it right along lately—and we're ready for them, with a new supply of all sizes and blocks, and an increased force of salesmen—no delay or trouble in finding the particular hat they want.

Men are waking up more and more to the fact that the Stetson Feather-weight and Self-conforming Derbies, at $3.50 and $5, are the only stiff hats that have the additional advantage of being as light and easy to wear as a soft hat. And the man who has once tested them will never buy any other.

And we hear this emphasized, a dozen times a day by men who have "come back for another."

If you want a new stiff-hat experience, come in and try on a "Stetson." $3.50 and $5.

Blue-and-Green SUITINGS

Blue and green has been a popular color-combination for women's millinery for several years. Now, in the form of checks, plaids and stripes, it is rapidly gaining ground in Suitings for women's tailored gowns.

We have been fortunate enough to pick up two attractive lots of these Blue-and-green Suitings, one in a fine stripe, the other in two sizes of checks, to sell at a saving:

$1.25 French Checked Suiting at 85c a Yard

Blue-and-green checks in granite weave that will make up into attractive suits. 48 inches wide. An importer's surplus at a great saving—85c a yard, worth $1.25.

$1.25 Imported Striped Suitings at 75c a Yard

The importer had a few pieces of these Blue-and-green Pin-striped Suitings above his orders. He let us have them at close to half his regular selling price. So you save fifty cents a yard. 45 inches wide, at 75c a yard, instead of $1.25.

Pleasure In A PHONOGRAPH

The possessor of an Edison Phonograph has at his disposal an unlimited fund of entertainment for Winter evenings. The WANAMAKER Club Plan of easy payments makes it a simple matter to possess one of these excellent instruments, without the drain on the purse that a single payment would entail—$1 down, and the balance at the rate of ten per cent. of the price a month.

And, since the selling price of the Edison Gold Moulded Records has been reduced to 35c each, it becomes an inexpensive matter to secure a collection of songs, recitations and musical selections on various instruments, that reproduce artistically and perfectly.

Another great and growing use of the Edison Phonograph is as a Language Phone, whereby French, German, and Spanish are taught, in a series of lessons, in a manner that ensures absolutely correct pronunciation—the language is simply talked into you! Full details on application.

There will be an interesting

AUTOPSY SHOWS FINGER MARKS ON WOMAN'S NECK

Coroner Investigating Yorkville Prison Death.

CHOKING HELPED HER END

Not Due Alone to That, Physician Says, Because Prisoner Suffered from Bright's Disease.

An autopsy performed yesterday on the body of the woman who died Thursday afternoon in the Yorkville Court Prison revealed what Coroners' Physician O'Hanlon declared to be unmistable signs of finger prints on the neck. He was not sure that she died from an actual choking, but said the injury to her neck might easily have accelerated death, as she had Bright's disease.

"Deaths of this kind are entirely too numerous," he said. "That woman was a fit subject for a hospital, not a prison. I am not clear that this woman died from the choking alone. If I was I would go to the District Attorney direct with the case."

The woman was arrested by Policeman William J. Flynn at First Avenue and Seventeenth Street on Thursday morning. In the opinion of the Coroners' physician, she was dying on her feet when she stood before the Magistrate in the Yorkville Court, about 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The symptoms of her disease were clouded, however, because all agree that she had been drinking as well. There is a shadowy train of evidence tending to show that the woman tried to commit suicide in her cell in the Yorkville prison, and there is also mystery about her identity. Her name, it is almost positively known, is not Eliza Smith.

Who is responsible for the finger marks on the woman's neck is the one thing which Coroner Scholer is most anxious to discover. There was a struggle in getting the woman down the narrow stairs to the prison pens after she had been sentenced by Magistrate Flammer. It took four men to carry her down, but it is not clearly established even that she got her injuries there.

There are conflicting stories as to what first started the row. One is that the woman said she was too ill to move, and sat down. Warden Lynch avers, however, that she had not understood what her sentence was and insisted upon knowing it before she went down stairs.

Warden Lynch sought to pacify her by saying he would say a good word to the Judge about her in the morning and endeavor to get her released. She quieted down a bit and was then placed in a cell. A little while later Turnkey Mountain passed. She was sitting with her face against the bars, her wrap around her neck, the ends of which she still held in her hands. Her face had such a fixed look and was so pale that the turnkey became alarmed and spoke to her. She did not reply. He then hastily opened the door.

The woman asked for a drink of water, but the Warden saw that she was not reviving, and sent for Dr. Frank A. McGuire, the prison surgeon. She was dead when he got there. That is the story as it is told by Warden Lynch.

When Coroner Scholer examined the body he noticed something peculiar about the condition of the skin on the neck, and told the Warden so. Dr. McGuire thought she had died from natural causes, possibly heart disease, but admitted that the bruises on the neck might have had something to do with her death.

It is, of course, not clear that the woman got the choking in the Yorkville Court. She was transferred from the East Twenty-second Street Police Station to the East Thirty-fifth Street Police Station, where there is a matron. At both places it was said last night that the woman had not complained that she was ill.

MACK LEAVES SCHOOL BOARD.

Gives Ill-Health as Excuse—Disagreed with the Mayor.

With the explanation that it was due to ill-health, Jacob W. Mack sent to the Mayor yesterday his resignation as a member of the Board of Education. His withdrawal followed the board's receipt of Mayor McClellan's letter suggesting a remedy for the present condition of the public schools, and it was recalled last night that Mr. Mack, in discussing the letter at the board's last meeting, said:

"I warn this board not to allow anything of an emergency to encroach upon the educational side of its work. The ideal class for the highest grades is twenty or twenty-five, and yet we are asked to crowd fifty, fifty-five, or sixty pupils in a room. It is a farce. It is not education. It is a question of dollars and cents. We can put all the children on full time if we have the money. But on the one side we are told that we are spending more money than was ever spent before, and on the other we are being criticised for not providing a full day's schooling for every child. We are rapidly being ground between the upper and nether millstones."

Since Henry A. Rogers died Mr. Mack had been regarded as a likely successor to the Presidency of the board. He was appointed a member in 1885 by Mayor Strong. Mayor Van Wyck did not reappoint him, but he came in again with the Low administration. When he resigned he was Chairman of the board's Committee on Elementary Schools. To this committee the Mayor's letter was referred, and much of the responsibility of solving the problem would have fallen on the Chairman.

SAVED HELPLESS SHIP.

Captain of Revenue Cutter Rush Reports Details of a Rescue.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Capt. Shoemaker, Chief of the revenue cutter service, has received a report from Capt. Kilgore of the cutter Rush, dated Juneau, giving the details of the rescue by his crew of the American ship McLauren on Aug. 30 last, about ten miles from Dutch Harbor, Unalaska.

The Rush sighted an open boat which was found to be manned by five men, including the Superintendent of the cannery company, which owned the McLauren. The men said that the ship had lost her rudder and that the crew of the open boat had been to Dutch Harbor for assistance and finally sighted the Rush. On reaching the McLauren, Capt. Kilgore found that she was dragging her anchor. With great difficulty a line was run to her and she was finally towed into Dutch Harbor.

It was found that 101 men, who had been on the McLauren had left the ship and had landed in a cove. These were later brought off, with the exception of six men, who had started overland to Dutch Harbor, a distance of twelve miles. Owing to impassable glaciers it was feared that these six would perish and a party from the cutter McCulloch was sent out to rescue them.

NEGRO LAWYER ARRESTED.

Everett T. Chappell, a young negro lawyer of 190 West One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Street, was taken a prisoner to the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Police Station last night on a charge of assaulting Policeman Buckridge. He was arrested on the platform of the elevated road at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Eighth Avenue.

According to Buckridge, Chappell prevented the policeman from getting off a train, refused to get out of the way, and then struck the policeman.

YOUNG AMERICAN A SUICIDE.

George A. Davis of Kansas City Found Dead in a London Hotel.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—George A. Davis, said to be the son of a wealthy ranch owner of Kansas City, was found dead in bed at a leading London hotel this morning. An artery of his left arm had been cut with a razor, which was found beside the body. It is supposed that Davis committed suicide.

Davis, who was twenty-six years old, came to London about two weeks ago with his wife on a pleasure tour. On Tuesday he was slightly indisposed, and a physician was called in and prescribed for him, but the complaint was not serious.

Mrs. Davis occupied an adjoining room. She is prostrated, and is unable to throw any light on her husband's death. When the body was found Mrs. Davis telegraphed to her husband's father, J. J. Davis of Kansas City, who cabled to a friend in London to take charge of the body. It will be taken to America after the inquest, which will be held on Sept. 26. The body has been taken to a mortuary preparatory to the inquest.

No reason is known for the supposed suicide. Davis is said to have been perfectly cheerful last evening

HORSE AND MULE THE THIEVES.

Jersey City Grocer's Bread Box Was Robbed Every Morning.

Acting Patrolman James McGovern of Jersey City arrested a horse and a mule yesterday and thereby solved a mystery that has puzzled detectives of the Seventh Street Police Station. James Brown, who keeps a grocery store at Grove and Sixteenth Streets, reported that the early delivery of bread placed in a box outside his shop had been stolen for several mornings.

Early yesterday morning McGovern saw the horse and mule wandering along Grove Street. Not knowing whether they were astray or had been trained to make their way to their stable, he followed them. Greatly to his surprise the animals stopped at the Brown bread box, lifted the lid with their noses, and began to munch the bread. McGovern led the animals to the police station, where he formally charged them with larceny. They were claimed later by the owner, John Hogan, who settled the case by paying Brown for all the bread that had disappeared from the box.

SAVED INVALID AT FIRE.

Policeman and Nurse, a Neighbor, Did Hard Work Well.

Mrs. John Campbell of 246 East Eighty-seventh Street for a month has been nursing Mrs. Barbara Ludwig, who lives on the same floor and who has been suffering from blood poisoning. Yesterday afternoon, while she and Dr. E. G. Kessler were talking to Mrs. Ludwig, a fire started in Mrs. Campbell's rooms, and when she returned to her apartments and opened her door a sheet of flame burst out, burned her hands, and singed her hair.

She shouted "Fire!" and ran back to Mrs. Ludwig, whom she was trying to lift from bed as Policeman Alfred Smith rushed in. He seized the invalid and started for the hall. By this time the halls were filled with smoke, and he was unable to see the door. Mrs. Campbell led the way, and the policeman carried the woman to the street and then into the house next door. Mrs. Ludwig was unconscious.

Dr. Kessler, who had left the house before the fire was discovered, returned to the house and attended the woman. He said that she suffered greatly from the shock and fright and that her condition was precarious.

When the firemen reached the house the flames had spread to the second floor and were climbing up through the airshaft. The fire was put out only after some hard work. The tenants in the rear of the tenement from the first floor to the fifth were burned out.

MOVE FOR BRIDGE TERMINAL.

Argument Heard for Appointment of Appraisal Board.

The second hearing on the city's application to have an appraisal commission appointed in the proceedings to condemn property at the Manhattan end of the Brooklyn Bridge for terminal purposes was held yesterday in the Supreme Court, before Justice Giegerich. The property sought to be acquired is on the block bounded by Park Row, Tryon Row, Centre, and Chambers Streets.

There were a score of lawyers on hand to oppose the Corporation Counsel's petition, alleging that the law under which he intended to proceed was illegal. Lewis L. Delafield, for Alfred Storms and others as owners of Leggett's Hotel, on Park Row, moved the dismissal of the proceeding.

Assistant Corporation Counsel Theodore Connolly argued in favor of the appointment of the commission, and was backed up by Charles Blandy, who said he appeared as attorney for eight property owners on the block who favored the proposed improvement. Justice Giegerich refused to dismiss the proceeding, and the taking of proof was commenced. After Bridge Commissioner George E. Best and C. F. Nicoll, Chief Engineer, had been heard the Justice announced that he would reserve his decision.

POLICE TRAFFIC HORSE SLAIN.

Fatally Hurt at New Work—No Bullet to End Misery.

While Roundsman Joseph A. Howard of the mounted traffic squad was attempting to start a balky truck horse driven by Albert Reilly of 84 Butler Street, Brooklyn, at Park Row and Beekman Street, yesterday afternoon, the shaft of the wagon struck Howard's horse, which was new to the traffic work, inflicting a fatal wound. The Roundsman did not realize the extent of the horse's hurt at first and rode the animal a short distance, when it began to stagger. He jumped off, unbuckled the saddle, and grasped the horse by the bridle as it fell to the ground near Mail Street. The horse struggled to its feet and broke away from the Roundsman, running into Mail Street, where it was again captured.

Fireman Richard Harde of Engine 24 held the horse down by its head and others helped to tie it. The animal died in half an hour. Many in the crowd criticised the police for not shooting the horse and putting it out of its misery.

Sergt. McCulloch and the fireman were both slightly hurt by the struggling horse.

JUSTICE SMITH ILL.

Attacked with Acute Indigestion at Queens Court.

Owing to a sudden attack of acute indigestion while in his office, Supreme Court Justice Wilmot M. Smith did not take his seat on the bench in the Queens County Court House yesterday, and as a result many of the cases that were to be heard at yesterday's session will have to go over until the next term of the court.

Justice Smith arrived at the Court House from his home in Patchogue at 11 o'clock. Shortly after taking his seat at the desk in the judicial chambers he complained of illness, and Dr. Burnett, who was summoned, advised the removal of Judge Smith to St. John's Hospital, directly opposite the Court House. Judge Smith remained at the hospital until 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when he was able to leave for home. He will not be able to leave his home for several days.

The Petit Bleu adds that Princess Stéphanie will appeal to the Austrian Emperor.

DE PLEHVE'S SUCCESSOR ANXIOUS FOR REFORMS

Sviatopolk-Mirsky Realizes Difficulties Facing Him.

UPHOLDS LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Believes the Zemstvos Can Do Much for the Country, but Says a New Constitution Now Is Impossible.

VILNA, Russia, Sept. 23.—The unveiling to-day of the monument to Catherine the Great in the square facing the Governor's Palace was particularly interesting, because it was the occasion of the last public appearance here of Prince Sviatopolk-Mirsky, the ex-Governor General of Vilna and new Minister of the Interior, who leaves Vilna for St. Petersburg to-morrow.

He was received everywhere during the day with the utmost enthusiasm, by Jews and Christians alike. In fact, the Prince is extremely popular with the Jews, who compose nearly half the population of Vilna.

In conversation to-day the Prince is quoted as saying that he firmly intends, as Minister of the Interior, to act in the spirit of the Emperor's manifesto of 1903. In effect, he said he was a resolute opponent of forcible repression, and intended to devote special attention to education. It is confidently expected here that important concessions to the Jews will be announced shortly.

The whole town is festooned with bunting and a great crowd attended the unveiling ceremony, which was significant owing to the presence of varying elements. The ecclesiastical dignitaries on the platform included orthodox priests, Lutherans, Jews, and Roman Catholics.

When the monument was unveiled the Grand Duke Michael, brother of the Emperor, gave the signal for a salute of 360 guns. The Grand Duke subsequently reviewed the Cossacks of the Third Army Corps.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 23.—In his palace at Vilna to-day, after the ceremony of unveiling the Catherine monument there, Prince Sviatopolk-Mirsky granted an interview to a newspaper correspondent. The Prince said he had not underestimated the grave responsibilities and great difficulty that confronted him upon assuming the portfolio of the Interior.

The situation, he said, was a particularly trying one and worthy of the best endeavors of an abler man than he. The post had to deal with the most important problems of a gigantic empire—problems which touched the life and well-being of over 100,000,000 people—but he should enter upon his new duties with a hopeful spirit and a firm resolution to perform his task according to the light given him.

"It would be incorrect to say," the Prince continued, "that I have a definite programme as yet. I have some well defined ideas, all of which have the same objective, namely, the welfare of the people. If I can be said to have a programme that is it in few words.

"I count myself fortunate to have served as Governor of three provinces. This has given me an intimate acquaintance with the people and their needs and conditions, and I trust the experience may prove of great value in exchanging a post as executor for one as a formulator of policies.

"All my life I have been a student of the Russian people. I realize fully how many and how complex are the problems of internal administration. We must not be impatient. These problems cannot be academically or instantaneously solved. Their magnitude is hardly grasped abroad. Ultra-radicalism as well as ultra-conservatism should be avoided.

"Time is a great corrector if we push patiently toward our ends. Things which we might desire to see march quickly may sometimes advance with painful slowness, but the goal will be reached at last. All we can do is to keep definitely in view our ultimate aims and meet and better conditions as we can. We must discharge our duty to the present, and leave our work a heritage to posterity, which must look after the future.

"What the situation of the Russian Empire a century hence will be, who can tell? Abroad, people speak of a new Constitution for Russia. Such a thing is impossible under present conditions, but there is such a thing as local self-government as exemplified in the zemstvos. I believe in the zemstvos. I have gone through every grade of service in the zemstvos and am convinced that they contain possibilities for the amelioration of the conditions of the lower classes. Eventually they could give what the people want.

"There are other internal problems of great importance, and, above all, the Jewish question, in which I am deeply interested. It is of the most serious character. I have studied it carefully and most faithfully.

"For Jews of the higher and better classes we have done much. The Emperor's recent ukase extended the privileges of residence and occupation. But it is the condition of the poorer classes which is most pressing. They are restricted to residence in towns and cities and within the Pale, where they live as best they can. I earnestly desire to give them larger opportunities for life and work.

"Generally speaking, without going further into detail, I may say the Emperor's manifesto of 1903 represents the platform upon which I enter the Ministry of the Interior. It is a lofty, noble conception of liberty. Conscience and decentralization are its basic principles. If it were interpreted in a liberal spirit we should have tranquillity, progress, and development in the interior of Russia."

CALLS THE VATICAN A CORPSE.

ROME, Sept. 23.—After the adjournment of the Freethinkers' Congress here to-day the delegates formed in procession and marched to the monument to Giordano Bruno, who was burned by the Inquisition in 1600, and deposited wreaths upon it, in testimony of their feeling of antagonism to the Vatican.

Several violent speeches were delivered, a Belgian—ex-Deputy Fournemont—summing up as follows: "The Vatican is a corpse; we are life."

Similar demonstrations were made at the Janiculum Monument to Garibaldi.

It is asserted that the Pope is preparing a letter to the Catholic world protesting against the congress as an offense against his spiritual position as the head of 300,000,000 Catholics and ending with claiming the independence of the Papacy.

CANADIANS WANT ARBITRATION.

Sir Thomas Barclay Says They Would Approve Anglo-American Treaty.

EDINBURGH, Sept. 23.—The Institute of International Law to-day discussed Sir Thomas Barclay's proposal that a permanent committee of the institute be appointed for the purpose of dealing with questions arising out of practice before the Hague Court.

In the course of a speech Sir Thomas Barclay referred at considerable length to the agitation for a treaty of arbitration between Great Britain and America. He said he hoped that as soon as the election in the latter country was over substantial progress would be made in this direction irrespective of which party was victorious.

Sir Thomas said there had been doubt regarding the attitude of Canada on this subject, but he had addressed meetings throughout the Dominion and had found that the proposition to settle differences with America by arbitration was warmly welcomed.

Sir Thomas said the peace of the world now depended upon the power of neutrals, and instanced the fact that the United States in the Venezuelan affair sent Great Britain, Germany, and Italy to The Hague in order to settle their claims.

A committee was appointed to study treaties of international arbitration.

DROUGHT IN EUROPE IS PROFITABLE TO US

Food for Cattle and Horses Will Have to Come from America.

MORE GRAIN EXPORTS LIKELY

Dry Weather Has Had Disastrous Results in Various Countries—Large Conflagrations Frequent.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—George H. Murphy, American Vice Consul General at Frankfort, says in a report:

"The severe drought which is afflicting European countries has had various injurious effects. It has caused frequent and large conflagrations; it has stopped river navigation entirely in many districts, causing a scarcity of fruits and garden truck, coal, wood, &c., and greatly advanced prices; it has forced works operated by water power to cease running. But it is particularly the insufficiency of feedstuffs for cattle and horses which causes anxiety in agricultural and commercial circles.

"The Governments of Bulgaria and Roumania have already issued decrees prohibiting the exportation of corn and other cattle feed. Servia and Austria-Hungary also have issued decrees prohibiting the exportation of corn, hay, and other feedstuffs. The order of the Austro-Hungarian Government is most rigid and sweeping, as it includes, in addition, bran and barley, potatoes and beans, oil cake, clover, and the husks, dregs and waste materials of malt and sugar beets; in short, everything, even including swill, which can serve as food for animals.

"Roumania and Austria-Hungary have heretofore been the principal European supply sources for corn and feedstuffs for the other countries of Western Europe. This source of supply now being closed, Germany, Italy, France, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, and England, as well as the Scandinavian countries, will have to depend principally upon the United States and, to a smaller extent, upon Argentina for food for their cattle and horses."

Consul General Mason at Berlin also says the United States will have to help feed Central Europe during the coming Autumn and Winter on account of drought in Russia, Austria, Germany, Switzerland, and France.

The Consul General states that since Aug. 15 a careful inquiry as to the grain crops and the general agricultural situation has been made by the central station for Prussian agriculture, and its report shows that there was a falling off from the yield of last year in Spring wheat, Winter rye, Spring rye, barley, and oats. Winter wheat furnished the only exception among these leading cereals.

Mr. Mason says the effects of the drought on pastures, meadows, and root crops of all kinds, both for forage and for human food, are still more serious.

"All this has reacted disastrously on the dairying industry," says the Consul General, "and milk, cheese, and butter are reduced in quantity and advanced in price. The standard fruits, apples, pears, plums, and peaches, which in early Summer promised a full average yield, have to a serious extent been ripened prematurely by the prolonged intense dry heat and have shriveled and fallen off in such quantities that the Autumn fruit crop is gravely compromised."

The Consul General predicts an increased demand not only for corn, wheat, and rye from the United States, but for fresh and preserved fruits, dried and salted fish, and such meats as the present inspection law of Germany permits to be imported.

FINN'S COURT CLERK ACCUSED.

Is Arrested for Having Issued Fraudulent Naturalization Papers.

Secret Service detectives yesterday arrested Sebastian Fasancello, twenty-seven years old, clerk in the First District Municipal Court, over which Justice Finn presides, and also said to be Tammany Captain in the Fourteenth Election District of the First Assembly District, charged with issuing fraudulent naturalization certificates. He was held in $2,000 bail for examination by United States Commissioner Ridgway. His captors say they believe that through his arrest the head of a syndicate which for years has been supplying fraudulent naturalization papers to Italians will be detected.

Information against Fasancello was furnished by Superintendent of Elections Morgan, and the Government detectives, after a two days' hunt, found him in his home, at 40 Thompson Street, which they searched after surrounding the house. Affidavits by Lorenzo Colucci, a farmer, of Bull's Head, S. I., and by Antonio Zarillo, a fruit vender, of 64 Thompson Street, are that on Jan. 20, 1902, Colucci bought for $50 the fraudulent papers on which he voted that Fall, and that they were furnished by Fasancello. The Government has not yet found the papers. Colucci deposes that on Sept. 10 Fasancello and Zarillo called upon him and bought them back for $20, saying that there was trouble about them.

Giorgio Minico of 15 Roosevelt Street, an employe of the Street Cleaning Department, was arrested yesterday at Superintendent of Elections Morgan's office. He is the man whose case was taken up by the People's Security Company a while ago, and the company, as counsel for the man, protested against his being questioned without his lawyer being present. A week ago Minico said he was only fourteen years old when he arrived in America. Mr. Morgan's men discovered that he was twenty-two years old at that time, and when Minico reappeared yesterday and was confronted with the evidence he confessed that he had not told the truth.

"I ISN'T HURTED AF'ER ALL."

Child Has Remarkable Escape from Death Under a Car.

Special to The New York Times.

EAST ORANGE, Sept. 23.—Passengers on Trolley Car No. 1,401, on Main Street, near the city line, saw a six-year-old girl have a miraculous escape from death this afternoon. The child started to run across the street in front of the car, saw it coming, stopped, and started to turn, and in so doing slipped and fell directly on the rails.

The motorman applied his emergency brake and reversed his motor, but the car rolled on and the little girl disappeared under the fender. In some manner she managed to wriggle aside and escape the wheels. When she was picked up the first thing she said was:

"Some one tell my musser I isn't hurted af'er all."

While attempts were being made to learn who she was a girl darted into the crowd, picked the child up, and rushed away.

HUNDREDS SEE MAN LEAP BEFORE ELEVATED TRAIN

Suicide During Rush Hours on Second Avenue Line.

FIRE ADDS TO EXCITEMENT

Curtain in Tenement Window Near By Blazes Up, Scaring Women—Reserves Called to Disperse Crowds.

While a great crowd of factory hands looked on helplessly, Paul Schmidt, twenty-eight years old, a waiter employed in a Harlem restaurant, who lived at 401 East Sixty-fourth Street, leaped in front of a south-bound train of the Second Avenue elevated line at the Eighth Street station during rush hours last night.

Detective Wasserman of the Fifth Street Station was standing on the up-town platform when the man leaped. Before the train had come to a full stop Wasserman leaped down on the north-bound track and made his way across. When the train stopped Wasserman looked under the forward truck and saw that the man was dead. Then he placed the motorman, Adolphus H. Mason, under arrest.

For a few moments the hundreds of people on the station platforms were mute with horror. Then a woman screamed, and another. Instantly the crowd was in an uproar, passengers in the train thronging the platforms and windows in their eagerness to find out what had happened. All over the neighborhood windows were thrown open, and hundreds of curious folk in the tenements joined in the excitement.

On the third floor of 158 First Avenue, nearly opposite the scene of the accident, a curtain was blown against the gas jet in the apartment of Solomon Jasse. Three women were hanging out of the window, and did not notice the blaze until the crowd on the platform shouted to them. Then they ran to a place of safety. An alarm was turned in, and in two minutes the fire apparatus was clanging through the streets below.

When the firemen came even a greater crowd gathered than had been attracted by news of the accident, and a call was sent in for the reserves of the Fifth Street Station. The blaze was put out without difficulty.

Coroner Goldenkranz, who lives at 63 St. Mark's Place, heard of the excitement and went to the scene. He viewed the body and ordered it sent to the station house. When the elevated employes and policemen tried to get the body out they found it tightly wedged. The wrecking crew was sent for, and it was half an hour before traffic could be resumed on the south-bound track.

The man was identified by means of letters and his discharge papers from the German Army. In his pockets were a silver watch, $2.06 in coin, a five-dollar gold piece, and a wedding ring.

Monday evening the parishioners will give their pastor a testimonial reception in the basement of the church.

NO POLITICS IN CIGAR FIGHT.

Domestic Manufacturers Expect to Win Label Case "On Its Merits."

Delegates from practically all of the tobacco trade associations left New York yesterday afternoon to attend the hearing on the customs cigar stamp controversy to be held by Acting Secretary of the Treasury Taylor to-day in Washington. Delegations will also be present from the cigar manufacturers' organizations of Boston, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, and Savannah. The Havana Cigar Company, which is opposing the issuance of the stamp that has caused all the controversy, will be represented by its general counsel.

Morris S. Wise, who will make the argument in favor of the new stamp for the domestic manufacturers, said yesterday that he was opposed to making the controversy a political issue. Then he added:

"The head men of the trust are all good North Carolina Democrats, anyway, and would be only too pleased to see our people vote against Roosevelt."

BOY KILLED; DRIVER ESCAPES.

Man on Red Coal Wagon Got Away from the Police.

George Caulkin, four years old, of 442 West Twenty-ninth Street, died in the Roosevelt Hospital last evening from injuries received during the afternoon when he was run over by a coal wagon in front of his home. According to the police the wagon was being driven recklessly through the street.

The driver escaped after the accident and the police are looking for him. The only description the police have of the wagon is that it was painted red.

No Relief for Autoists.

RIVERHEAD, L. I., Sept. 23.—District Attorney Smith has instructed the Deputy Sheriffs that the recent injunction does not restrain them from making arrests where they find an automobilist violating the speed law. He said:

"Don't pay any attention to that injunction. It does not prevent you from contracting a bill against the county, but only stops the payment of the bills passed by the court."

INSPECTORS PUT BLAME ON THE SLOCUM'S CREW

Exonerate Themselves of All Blame for Disaster.

APPROVE LIFE PRESERVERS

Say Many Persons Were Saved by Them —Coroner O'Gorman Calls Report a Coat of Whitewash.

Responsibility for the Slocum disaster, which cost 959 lives, is placed entirely with the officers and crew of the vessel in a report just handed down by the local Board of Steamboat Inspectors. While the Inspectors are unsparing in their criticism of the crew, and go so far as to revoke the licenses of Capt. Van Schaick, Pilot Edward Van Wart, and Chief Engineer B. F. Conklin for failure to do their duty, the life preservers and other life-saving appliances are said to have been adequate and in good condition.

Popular belief at the time held the faulty or insufficient appliances of this kind largely responsible for the accident, and as a result the Steamboat Inspectors, whose duty it is to see that vessels are provided with proper safeguards for an emergency, were severely criticised, and the investigation in connection with the Coroner's inquest did not tend to upset this belief.

Coroner O'Gorman, who was early at the scene of the disaster and took charge of the gathering of evidence, said last night that the report had no significance. He continued:

"The department was simply investigating itself, and the result has no significance. When Supervising Inspector Robert S. Rodie went to North Brother Island he tried to remove evidences of the neglect of his department. I put a stop to it and told him that he could touch nothing unless it had my seal on it. They have given the matter a fine coat of whitewash, and the only thing remaining to be done to make it an artistic job is to reinstate Lundberg. Dumont didn't ask us for any evidence. He could have had all he wanted for the asking."

The report is signed by Chief Inspectors James A. Dumont and Thomas H. Barrett and addressed to Robert S. Rodie, Chief Supervising Inspector of the board. There is one notable exception to the tone of relentless disapproval that characterizes the board's comment on the conduct of the crew. The report says:

Referring to the beaching of the General Slocum at North Brother Island, we would be remiss in our duty if we failed to mention the unselfish heroism displayed on the occasion by Mr. Everett Brandow, second engineer of the steamer, in the performance of his duty, who remained at the throttle of his engine answering all bells promptly, until his services were no longer required, this notwithstanding the commotion and panic on the steamer at the time, and without means of knowing from personal observation from his post in the engine room what the chances might be of saving his own life.

The only action of Capt. Van Schaick approved by the board is the beaching of the Slocum on North Brother Island. At the time the Captain was criticised for not beaching his steamer sooner. The conduct of the crew is referred to as follows:

The evidence before us indicates an absolute lack of discipline on the part of the crew because of the negligence of the master of the steamer and of the pilot, who, under the law, is next to the master in charge, to observe the provisions which require these officers once, at least, each week to call all hands to quarters, and exercise them in the discipline and use of the fire pumps and all other apparatus for the safety of life on board such vessel, and to see that all the equipments required by the law are in complete working order for immediate use. * * * The evidence further shows that the chief engineer was grossly negligent when notified of the fire in that he did not see that the hose for the steam fire pump had been properly stretched before the water was turned on.

The board declares that many persons were saved by "the use of the alleged worthless life preservers," and says that the fact that no dead bodies were taken from the bottom of the river with life preservers on them was proof that no lives were lost by the inefficiency of the preservers.

The Inspectors report that they were unable to obtain the evidence of some important witnesses, among them Coroner Berry. Coroner Berry was in camp with the Seventy-first Regiment at the time of the investigation, and a subpoena was left at his office.

ABANDONS THIRD RAIL.

New Haven Road's Experiments with Electricity at Boston Unsuccessful.

BOSTON, Sept. 23.—The New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad is dismantling its third-rail electric line between Nantasket Junction and Braintree, and the announcement is made that the electrical equipment and operation of its suburban lines will not be undertaken until the invention of new appliances or the perfection of those now existing makes such a step more feasible. In this connection President C. S. Mellen of the New Haven Road said:

"We have not yet been able to make definite plans for electrical equipment, and it is not likely that we shall be able to do so right away."

The Nantasket branch of the New Haven Road was equipped with the third rail several years ago as an experiment. It is now said that, while the third-rail system has proved satisfactory on that section of the line, where only the electrically equipped cars are operated, on another section, where steam trains also have been run, the step has proved a failure.

President Mellen intimates that experiments have not been abandoned, saying:

"Whatever experiments are decided upon will take place at the New York end, where the problem is being worked out in connection with the subway. Whatever is decided upon with reference to this and to the Pennsylvania tunnel will govern the electrical plans not only of our road but of all the other large roads in the country."

DIES ON WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

Brookman's Injuries in Aerial Dive Brought Heart Failure.

John J. Brookman, a manufacturer of notions, died suddenly last night at his home, 180 Prospect Park West, Brooklyn, of heart failure, brought on by injuries received six weeks ago at Coney Island. Mr. Brookman, who was fifty-seven years old, was making the aerial dive, when, through the breaking of a pulley, he was thrown, dislocating his right hip. He was confined two weeks in the Seney Hospital, and since had been walking on crutches.

Yesterday was the thirtieth anniversary of his marriage to Emma Cragin, daughter of George B. Cragin, at one time President of the Produce Exchange. While reading in the library last night he suddenly collapsed and was dead before a physician arrived.

Wife Denies Cody Seeks Reconciliation.

Special to The New York Times.

NORTH PLATTE, Neb., Sept. 23.—Mrs. William F. Cody, wife of Buffalo Bill, denies the report that her husband, who is with his show in Europe, is seeking through correspondence to effect a reconciliation with his wife, and to thus pave the way to withdraw his petition for a divorce. Mrs. Cody says she has received no letters from her husband, and that no one has communicated with her on the subject of a reconciliation or the divorce proceedings.

Man Killed by a Train at Stamford.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., Sept. 23.—George R. Rogalski of 9 Orchard Street, this city, was fatally injured and his brother Felix had a narrow escape from death on the railroad here at 2:20 o'clock this morning. The two men, it is believed, were stealing railroad ties from the railroad property in Selleck's Cut, when the Federal Express, bound east, bore down on them. In the darkness they became confused. Felix jumped aside, but George was hit. He was brought to the hospital and died this afternoon.

CANADA'S WHEAT CROP GOOD.

Report to Lord Strathcona by Minister Clifford Sifton.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Sept. 23.—Minister of the Interior Clifford Sifton has cabled Lord Strathcona, Canada's High Commissioner, respecting crop conditions in the following terms:

"I am now able to state definitely that under conditions of unusual difficulty in the Northwest a fair average crop of wheat of good quality has been reaped and is now secure from substantial damage. The reports of injury by frost and rust were grossly exaggerated. The wheat of Manitoba and Northwest Territories will aggregate from 55,000,000 to 60,000,000 bushels. The quality is good and the price is ranging around $1 per bushel."

MYSTERIOUS POISON DEATH.

Presbyterian Hospital Doctors Perplexed Over Case of Gustav Eichler.

Gustav Eichler, twenty-four years old, died in the Presbyterian Hospital last night from poisoning, having been removed there from his home, 228 East Eighty-sixth Street, a few hours before. The physicians at the hospital are unable to state what kind of poisoning the man died from.

Eichler was a clerk. On Tuesday he complained of feeling ill, and a doctor was called. The patient became worse, and yesterday was taken to the hospital unconscious. He died shortly after being admitted. The Coroner's office has been notified, and an autopsy will be performed today.

MAN DOZED, ROBBERS WORKED.

James Stewart Sat on Porch While House Was Sacked.

Masked with handkerchiefs, two men entered the home of James Stewart, on the outskirts of Westchester village late Thursday afternoon, ransacked it from cellar to roof, and made away with $90 and some jewelry and trinkets. Meanwhile Stewart, who is sixty years old, was dozing comfortably in a rocker on the porch.

Stewart's wife and two daughters were at the village, shopping. Two boys, the police say, saw the robbers. The police have a good idea, they say, who the men are.

C. VANDERBILT'S YACHT WON.

Rainbow Beat the Seventy-Footers In N. Y. Y. C. Regatta.

Cornelius Vanderbilt's Rainbow defeated the other seventy-footers on Long Island Sound yesterday in one of the best races that has been seen this season. She started last and finished first, beating the Yankee 1:24 and the Virginia 5:02. The race was the largest and best contested held by the New York Yacht Club during the year apart from the events of the annual cruise. There were eleven starters altogether, three thirty-six-footers and five raceabouts, besides the seventy-footers.

The start was made in a fresh southwest wind off Mott's Point, in Hempstead Harbor. The course for the seventies was to Parsonage Point, on the north shore of the Sound, thence to Shippan Point, off Stamford, Conn., and back to the starting line, a distance of 21½ knots. The smaller yachts sailed from Parsonage Point to a mark in the middle of the Sound between Matinnicock and Oak Points, and back, a distance of 11½ knots. The first leg of the course was a run, with booms on the starboard and spinnakers on the port hand, the second a broad reach, with booms on the port hand, and balloon-jib-topsails set; the last leg was a beat to windward. The wind held true and fresh from start to finish.

The Yankee was the first of the seventies to cross the line, the Virginia followed, and the Rainbow was last, with a handicap of 18 seconds. But the Rainbow was really in the best position, for she was able to blanket her competitors and consequently overtake them. So she secured the lead before rounding the first mark. The Virginia also passed the Yankee. The Yankee finally got ahead of the Virginia, and was in second place at the Shippan Point mark. The times there were: Rainbow, 3:26:10; Yankee, 3:27:15; Virginia, 3:28:30.

All three hauled up on the wind and headed for the Long Island shore on the starboard tack, but the Yankee soon went to port and the Rainbow followed suit on her weather bow. The Virginia held the starboard tack clear across the Sound, and was never afterward in the race. The Rainbow and Yankee made a stubborn fight in the middle of the Sound. East of Matinnicock Point they came up with a tow of barges. Both were to leeward of the tow and forereaching on it. The Yankee endeavored to force the Rainbow far enough under the tow to slip astern and take the windward berth, but the Rainbow's skipper would not fall into the trap. By stipulations the vessels were sailed by their owners, so Cornelius Vanderbilt was at the helm of the Rainbow, and he handled her admirably. He had with him George Carmack, Secretary of the New York Yacht Club. The Yankee was sailed by Harry Maxwell, who had with him Frank Bowne Jones and Percy Chubb. W. K. Vanderbilt was at the helm of the Virginia.

The Anoatok, although she started last, led the thirty-six-footers round the first and second marks, but fell behind on the windward work. The Mimosa, which had taken second place off the wind, went to the front on the wind.

COLLEGE TEAMS PLAY FIRST GAMES TO-DAY

Four Important Football Matches in East and One in West.

COLUMBIA MEETS UNION HERE

Blue and White Eleven Will Play Up-State Men at American League Park.

College football will open in earnest today, four games of importance being scheduled in the East and one in the West. Columbia will meet Union on the local field, Pennsylvania will play State College on Franklin Field, Layfette will play Wyoming Seminary at Easton, and Syracuse and the Cortlandt Normal School will meet at Syracuse. Chicago will open the Western season with a game with Lawrence at Chicago.

Columbia's game with Union to-day will be played on the new gridiron at American League Baseball Park, and the match will be called at 3:30 o'clock. Columbia defeated Union last year by a score of 38—0, and Coach Morley thinks this tally should be duplicated this afternoon, as the Morningside eleven is playing in better form now than it did at this time last year. The game this afternoon will be the first college football match ever held at American League Park. The gridiron has been laid out from south to north, and runs along the line from home plate to left field. It is in pretty fair condition, though the bare spots at home plate and along the base lines have not yet been sodded over.

Despite the fact that there is to be a game this afternoon the Columbia players had the hardest kind of practice yesterday afternoon. Morley put his men through the usual preliminaries, including signal practice, and then lined up two elevens for twenty minutes of hard scrimmaging. The 'Varsity scored one touch-down on a thirty-yard run by Metzenthin. The scrubs did not score at all, though they once got the ball within five yards of the 'Varsity's goal. Here the first team showed a fine resistance, and took away the leather on downs. The scrub eleven was reinforced by the presence of Harold Weekes, Columbia's famous half back. Weekes made several of his ground-gaining runs, but was handicapped through ignorance of the signals.

A long practice at Soldiers' Field by the Harvard football squad was marked by the brilliant work of Raymond Oveson, a six-foot candidate for a tackle position, who made his appearance for the first time yesterday. Opposed to "Ted" Meier, the veteran tackle, he called forth favorable comment from the coaches by his remarkable work. Much comment was caused by the new way in which the backs are lining up for all the offensive plays. The old-style has been entirely abandoned, and all plays are now started from a tandem formation, which the full back leads, and which is shifted from one side of the line to the other at will. Yesterday this new formation was still further complicated by both the ends being shifted to the same side of the line.

In a fast game yesterday afternoon Princeton's 'Varsity scored a touch-down on the scrub after nearly fifteen minutes of work. For a while the principal tactics were line plunges, on which the 'Varsity, through its heavier weight, gained ground steadily. In the last half of the practice a punting game was played, and the number of fumbles showed a weakness on the part of the men playing behind the line. The tackling, however, was accurate, and Ward and Crawford, the two ends, got down the field in good shape. McCormick, the 'Varsity full back, did the principal punting, and a marked improvement was noted in his kicking. Among the new candidates out were two good men from the Princeton Preparatory School—Reiter, an applicant for end, and a strong kicker, who is the brother of Bozy Reiter, and Samuels, who is a 200-pounder and a good guard.

The Yale players had a short but fast scrimmage yesterday, and worked on the new tackles shift with Cates and Bloomer dropping behind the line and Cates taking the ball. Lawrence, a tackle and end substitute, was injured in the knee, but not seriously. Tripp, the old University of Michigan guard, joined the squad yesterday, but was given no hard work. He will be a leading candidate this year for Bloomer's place at right guard, now held by Smith, the former freshman centre. Mitchell, last year's punter, took charge of the back field, and spent an hour drilling Roome, White, and Hoyt in the punting game.

What may be considered the first Cornell 'Varsity eleven was made up on Percy Field yesterday, and was composed as follows: Sheldon, left end; Cook, left tackle; Dann, left guard; Chapman, centre; Smith, right guard; Petersen, right tackle; Oderkirk, right end; Lynah, (Captain,) quarter back; Rice, left half back; Coc, full back; Birmingham, right half back. The scrubs were scored against twice, once by a touch-down and once by a goal from the field. Rice made the former and Birmingham the latter. The 'Varsity showed general improvement all around and Coach Warner was pleased with the way the combination worked. Both the 'Varsity ends of last year are laid up with slight injuries and Halliday did not report at all to-day. Newman, who played centre last year, has left the university. Costello, last year's guard, will report for work to-morrow.

Signal work was the chief feature of the practice at New York University yesterday. The first team of this season was picked and run through simple plays. The same backs, Cragin left half, Rogge full, and Roberts right half, as were used Thursday, constituted the back field yesterday. Connell was out in a suit after an absence of nearly a week, due to a threatened attack of appendicitis. Capt. Reilley announced that a freshman team would be organized immediately on the opening of college, and that a complete schedule would be arranged. Games with Centenary Collegiate Institute of Hackettstown and Trinity School have already been arranged, and dates with Morris High School and Betts Academy are pending.

AUTO BOATS RACE AGAINST HEAVY SEA

Vingt-et-Un Alone Proves Fast in Rough Weather.

MERCEDES VI. TOWED HOME

Only Five Competitors in Challenge Cup Contest Finish Second Race on the Hudson—Several Minor Accidents.

W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.'s, auto boat Mercedes VI., which won the first race on the Hudson River for the gold Challenge Cup offered by the American Power Boat Association, failed to finish the contest yesterday and had to be towed back to the Columbia Yacht Club, at the foot of West Eighty-sixth Street. The boat shipped such quantities of water on the homeward trip that it was impossible for her to keep her motors going. Robert Jacob, the designer of the boat, steered, as Mr. Vanderbilt was sailing his seventy-footer Virginia in the race at Glen Cove.

The second race was finished under much severer conditions than characterized the first event. A strong southeast wind was blowing and all the reports that came back from the competitors were that the sea was very heavy above Yonkers. This occasioned, with one exception, slower time, and only five of the eight boats that started finished.

The Vingt-et-Un II. was the only boat to come out of the contest with exceptional honors. The wind and the waves seemed to have no effect upon her, and, driven by C. M. Hamilton, who has proved himself a master hand throughout the season in getting all the speed possible out of the boat, she completed the full 32-knot course in 1 hour 27 minutes and 3 seconds, showing the admirable time of 22.056 knots per hour, or 25.36 statute miles. This was practically the same as her record on the preceding day, for the committee, after figuring until late at night, as a result of the stakeboat anchoring below the proper mark for the turn on the first day, was obliged to modify the times somewhat for the initial event, and this reduced the surprising record of 27 statute miles credited to the Vingt-et-Un to about 25 miles. Her performance yesterday was an infinitely better test of the boat's ability to maintain good speed in rough weather. She won handily, although the last boat to start. With the 7 points she won on the preceding day and the 8 she earned in her victory yesterday, the Vingt-et-Un now leads for the Challenge Cup with a total of 15 points.

The Vingt-et-Un and Vanderbilt's boat rounded the turn just below the Pleasure Pier dock, almost together. The Mercedes VI. started over ten minutes ahead of the Vingt-et-Un, for she lost ten minutes of her actual handicap allowance by arriving late. Just before the stakeboat was reached the Vingt-et-Un passed the Vanderbilt boat, rounding 35 seconds ahead. Before reaching Yonkers the Mercedes was so full of water that Mr. Jacob had to stop and bail out. A launch finally took him in tow, and it was nearly 7 o'clock before the boat arrived at Eighty-sixth Street.

The Flip, a Hartford boat owned by C. D. Holmes, made a splendid showing, finishing second, and although requiring over two hours and fifteen minutes to complete the journey, her time was but a few minutes slower than on the preceding day, and must therefore rank as a very seaworthy auto boat.

The Speedway, although the last of the five boats to cross the line, is a close second on points to the Vingt-et-Un, having now a total of 12, while H. L. Bowden's Mercedes, U. S. A., and the Flip have 11 each. The points won yesterday were: Vingt-et-Un, 8; Flip, 7; Marcirene, 6; Mercedes, U. S. A., 5, and Speedway, 4. The summary:

Boat and Owner.	Start.	Finish.	Elapsed Time.
Vingt-et-Un II., W. S. Kilner		2:54:00	4:21:03	1:27:03
Flip, C. D. Holmes		2:32:00	4:47:59	2:15:59
Marcirene II., T. W. Allison		2:07:22	4:59:29	2:51:58
Mercedes, U. S. A., H. L. Bowden		2:44:12	4:59:29	2:15:17
Speedway, C. L. Seabury		2:44:57	5:14:38	2:29:41
Mercedes VI., W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr		2:33:05	did not finish.
Shooting Star, H. A. Lozier		2:32:48	did not finish.
Macaroni, C. H. Tangeman		2:37:22	did not finish.

Total number of points for two days' races—Vingt-et-Un II., 15; Speedway, 12; Mercedes, U. S. A., 11; Flip, 11; Mercedes VI., 10; Macaroni, 9; Marcirene II., 8; Shooting Star, 5; Josephine, 3, and Challenger, 0.

The third and final race will be held this afternoon over the same thirty-two-knot course. The point system is based on an allowance of one point for each boat that finishes and one for as many boats as are beaten.

INGOMAR'S LONG JOURNEY ENDS

Commodore Plant's Schooner Yacht Arrives at New London.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Sept. 23.—The schooner yacht Ingomar, Capt. Charles Barr, was sighted off New London Light at 8:45 A. M. today. She looked as trim and clean after her ocean voyage as if she had just come out of dry dock. A tug took her in tow shortly before noon and started up the Thames River with her. As the lighthouse was passed, Capt. Barr sent up his signal flag in a string from deck to truck. They conveyed a message to her owner, Commodore Morton F. Plant of the Larchmont Yacht Club, who has been looking for the yacht all week. The Ingomar will be taken to Riverside and berthed for stripping preparatory to being hauled up for the Winter. She came across the ocean in a cruising rig.

Prince Alert Makes New Record.

ALLENTOWN, Penn., Sept. 23.—Prince Alert to-day established a new half-mile track record by pacing a mile in 2:03½, without a wind shield, at the Allentown Fair Grounds. He made the same time at Bethlehem, Penn., on Sept 19 last year, but a shield was then used to achieve it. His time by quarters to-day was: 0:29½; 1:00; 1:31, and 2:03½. The conditions were perfect for fast time. The great pacer was driven by "Jack" Curry, and was paced by a running horse. He got away to a good start and covered the mile beautifully and without a skip.

HORSE SHOW AT MINEOLA FAIR.

Long Island Society Represented in Boxes and Ring.

From an ordinary agricultural exhibition the Queens-Nassau Counties Fair at Mineola was transformed into a social function yesterday by the opening of the third annual Horse Show under the auspices of the Agricultural Society of Queens-Nassau Counties. North Shore, South Shore, and the Hempstead colonies were all well represented in the boxes and the ring, while the parking spaces were lined with fashionable vehicles of every description, among which the coaches of Richard F. Carman, E. R. Ladew, H. V. R. Kennedy, and H. L. Pratt were particularly noticeable. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Duryea, Mrs. Adolf Ladenburg, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Carman, Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Ladew, Miss Elsie Ladew, Harvey S. Ladew, Allan Pinkerton, Miss Mollie C. Maxwell, Miss Adelaide Randolph, Miss Gertrude Sheldon, Walter R. Willets, Samuel Willets, Miss Gertrude Willets, R. D. Winthrop, Miss Helen Underhill, Mr. and Mrs. Paul D. Cravath, E. D. Morgan, Lloyd Brice, Robert Bacon, C. W. Provost, S. H. Pell, S. Osgood Pell, Herbert L. Pratt, and Roswell Eldridge.

The show was held within the central inclosure of the race track, and the track was used for two of the events. The boxes were located on the opposite side from and facing the stand, so that the occupants of both boxes and stands were able to see both the races on the track and the judging in the show ring.

Fifteen classes were judged during the day, and while the honors were well distributed Mr. and Mrs. Richard F. Carman of Huntington made the best showing, winning three firsts, two seconds, and a third. Two of their three blue ribbons were taken by Mrs. Carman's well-known black pair, Donner and Blitzen, and the third by a pony pair shown by Richard F. Carman, Jr. Mr. Carman's Yankee Consul and Christy Girl were second to Edward Knierim's Ned Allerton and Kissing, in the class for tall pairs, while his four-in-hand was placed second to Herbert L. Pratt's entry in the coach class.

Miss Mollie C. Maxwell of Lawrence took two blue ribbons with Rosebud in the run-about class and Jacobite in the saddle class. Samuel Willets of Roslyn won two firsts and a second in the hunter classes. The open hunters' class had thirty contestants, and was won by Mrs. Thomas B. Hitchcock, Jr.'s, Jouac King, with Herman B. Duryea's Ivanhoe second.

The show will be concluded to-day. The summary follows:

Athlete Gring Will Leave Harvard.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Sept. 23.—Harvard is going to lose her champion pole vaulter and best all-around athlete for a year. R. B. Gring, 1905, the only man in intercollegiate pole-vaulting whom McLaughlin, the Yale Captain, did not succeed in defeating in competition, and up to the present time one of the leading candidates for half back on the 'Varsity football team, has secured leave of absence from the university and is going to California for a year. The loss of Gring will not only be a serious blow to the track team and football squad, but also to the basket ball team, as he was one of the strongest players on the Harvard five. Gring will return to Harvard next Fall.

Engine and Seven Cars Smashed at North Branch, West Va.—Horses Blown 50 Yards Escape Unhurt.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Sept. 23.—Fast freight No. 94, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, struck a wagon loaded with 750 pounds of dynamite at the crossing at North Branch, West Va., four miles east of here, this afternoon. Two persons were killed and eight were injured, three of them seriously.

The dead are C. Walter Whitehair, front brakeman, Brunswick, and Nelson Pike, Martinsburg, engineer. The injured are A. B. Sanders, fireman, North Mountain, West Va., arm broken, scalded on face, body and hands; Charles Hamilton, Baltimore and Ohio operator and Postmaster at North Branch, cuts on face and body; Scott Hamilton of Little Orleans, Md., cuts in face and body, at least fifty in number; James Ashkettle, Little Orleans, cut in face; Mary Twigg, Oldtown, cut in face; Raymond Hamilton, cut in face; Maude Seibert, cut in face; James Laing, aged twenty-one, who was driving the dynamite wagon, cut on leg and ear drum fractured.

MARES LED IN FIVE RACES AT GRAVESEND

Lady Amelia, with Eleven Pounds Above Scale, Won First Event.

CHRYSITIS TOOK THE STAKES

Three Favorites Were Successful in a Programme of Seven Evenly Balanced Contests.

A programme of seven races at the Gravesend track yesterday made amends in the quantity offered for the lack of quality, but in spite of the extra event thrown in as lagniappe, the attendance was light.

The feature event of the card, the Willow Handicap, at five and a half furlongs, for fillies two years old, in effect proved to be only a part of the actual feature, for the filly that won that race, Pierre Lorillard's Chrysitis, had four others of her sex as winners in the course of the afternoon, mares being successful in five of the seven races, the only two that escaped them being two of the cheapest events of the afternoon.

The best race of the day and the most meritorious for the winner was the victory of the fast three-year-old Lady Amelia in the opening trial, a handicap over the short, six furlongs course restricted to fillies and mares of all ages. In this Lady Amelia was the top weight with 130 pounds, or eleven pounds more than scale weight, she being required to concede weights ranging from eleven pounds to the fast Flying Ship up to forty-two pounds to the bottom weights. In spite of the task set for her, Lady Amelia, ridden by Redfern, was always the favorite, though Teacress, a smart two-year-old, was well backed to beat her. To Witchcraft's lead away from the post, Lady Amelia went to the front in a flash, and racing clear of her field of nine opponents in the first fifty yards, opened so great a gap on her pursuers that she had the race won at the head of the quarter stretch. There Redfern tried to ease her a bit, and under her high weight, Lady Amelia showed a disposition to stop, but when Ancestor closed on her she went on again under hand riding and won cleverly by a half length, Ancestor finishing second, two lengths before Ascension, third.

For the Willow Handicap, nine of the twelve fillies named on the card went to the post with the Hurricana filly Burnt Hills the best backed at all stages of the betting. Burnt Hills got a bad break, however, and dropped out of the race in an early stage, the fast Handzarra leading to the stretch turn, where Pierre Lorrilard's Chrysitis, a 10-to-1 chance, went to the front from second place, and, drawing away at the end, won rather easily by four lengths from Santa Catalina, which closed a great distance of ground at the finish and beat Handzarra a neck for second place. Notes of the Thoroughbreds.

Bids on selling race winners enlivened matters for the professional horsemen at Gravesend yesterday, and after each selling contest a crowd gathered about the judges' stand. W. C. Daly was the first bidder, he advancing the price of S. Paget's Juvenaga from $1,200 to $1,500, the owner then retaining the gelding for the usual $5 advance. E. G. Stutte's Sidney C. Love, entered to sell for $1,000, next was bid up to $2,000 by the owners of Eagle, the second horse, Stutte keeping his horse for $5 more.

The Washington Jockey Club announced yesterday that at the solicitation of the owners of steeplechasers the club had decided to open the Junior Stakes for entries, the race being a steeplechase for three-year-olds and upward, to carry 140 pounds, over a two-mile course, about Nov. 22.

Jockey T. Burns, who was suspended for four days on Thursday for his actions on Proper at the post for the Occidental Handicap, obtained a rehearing yesterday, and after making excuses left the matter of his suspension to Starter Mars Cassidy. The starter relented, and racegoers were astonished to see Burns up on Out of Reach in the sixth race. Burns made a desperate effort to celebrate his restoration with a win, but the best he could do was to finish a neck behind the winner.

The sale of the National Stable's horses, in training, together with a number of consignments from other stables, will be held this afternoon at the Gravesend track, and from the entries the offering will be one of the biggest sales of horses in training held this Fall.

The new rivals for the place of favoritism among the jockeys at the metropolitan tracks, Hildebrand and W. Davis, two boys recently from the West, made a tie, so far as winners were concerned, at the Gravesend track yesterday.

The fast selling class horse Grey Friar, owned by John W. Schorr, died suddenly at the Gravesend track a few hours after his race against Canteen, when the gray horse finished second. No cause for the sickness that attacked the animal was ascertained.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Sept. 23.—The Greater New Yorks were lucky in escaping a defeat at the hands of the Clevelands to-day. The local men outbatted the visitors, and Rossman received four changes, three when the bases were filled, to win. Then Powell gave five bases on balls, and the fielding of Williams was wretched. Yet with all this handicap Griffith's men managed to tie the Clevelands, and after the ninth inning play was stopped because of darkness.

Cleveland started the run-getting in the first inning. Lush hit safely, but was forced at second by Elberfeld to Williams. Flick placed a rather difficult ball to Elberfeld, who threw badly to first, and Bradley reached third. A wild pitch gave Bradley a run. The New Yorks tied the score in the third inning on successive singles by Keeler, Elberfeld, and Williams. Anderson hit to Bradley, who threw out Williams at second, but Keeler crossed the plate. DETROIT, Sept. 23.—Another game that should have gone to the credit of the locals was lost by Pitcher Mullin. His error in the ninth inning gave a run, and two bases on balls later let in two more. Detroit earned every run off Young, the hitting of the locals being more timely than that of Boston. Raymond pitched fine ball for Detroit in the last three innings. Attendance, 1,000. Score:

NEW YORKS SHUT OUT BY THE PITTSBURGS

Ames Very Wild, but He Was Only Pitcher Available.

AMERICANS STILL IN THE LEAD

Greater New Yorks Played Tie Game with Cleveland, but Champion Bostons Won.

Having the championship won, the New York National League players did not exert themselves very much yesterday against the Pittsburgs, and with the wild delivery of Ames they scored no runs, while the champions made seven. As a last resort Ames was taken out of the box and Catcher Bowerman essayed to pitch. At Washington Park the Brooklyns gained a creditable victory over the Chicagos, and the St. Louis players struck a snag at Philadelphia, where they were beaten by eight to six. The Cincinnatis had a close game at Boston, winning by only a run.

But two games were played in the American League. The Greater New Yorks and Clevelands each made a run in nine innings when darkness compelled the game to be called. At Detroit the champion Bostons won by a run, and are now within three points of Griffith's men for the leadership. Summary follows:

NATIONAL LEAGUE.

New Yorks Have Only One Pitcher Available and Are Shut Out.

The New Yorks were far off in playing like pennant winners yesterday, and while the Pittsburgs emulated their example to a certain extent, the present champions were enabled to win by a score of 7 to 0. Ames was primarily responsible for this result, and, notwithstanding the repeated cries from the spectators of "Take him out," he lingered in the box until the close of the eighth inning, when, to the great surprise of the "rooters," Bowerman was substituted. It was the best change that could have been made under the circumstances, for, it was said, there was no other pitcher on the ground.

Eight Pittsburgers went to the bat in the second inning, Wagner starting off by getting to first base on called balls; McCormick sacrificed him to second, and he scored on Bransfield's hit to centre field.

Called balls gave Leach and Phelps a base, and they both scored on Case's hit to right field and Browne's overthrow to the plate to catch Leach.

When Bowerman began pitching in the ninth inning Marshall went behind the bat. Ritchey began with a safe bunt, which Bowerman tried hard to field, and Wagner reached first on four bad balls. McCormick's fly was caught by Gilbert. Devlin fielded Bransfield's hit to Marshall to head off Ritchey, but the latter got back to third safely. With three men on bases, Leach hit to left field, scoring two, and Phelps helped two more men home on a hit to left field.

The New Yorks got a man as far as third base in only the first and second innings, Browne reaching that bag on a hit, a steal, and wild throw of Phelps. Devlin on a force hit, base on balls, and Bransfield's failure to complete a double play. The score:

BOSTON, Sept. 23.—Ewing struck out twelve Boston players to-day by employing the so-called "split ball." BROOKLYN, 3; CHICAGO, 2.

In a short and finely played game at Washington Park yesterday, the Brooklyns won a well-earned victory over Chicago by a score of 3 to 2. The pitching of Jones and Weimer was of a tantalizing character, and both received splendid support, Shulte's bad throw to the plate in the third inning being the only fielding error committed during the game. A hit by a pitched ball, Dillon's two-bagger to right field, a base on balls, Lumley's single, and Shulte's poor throw scored two runs for Brooklyn in the third inning. In the sixth inning Lumley tallied on a base on balls and Sheckard's two-base hit along the right-field foul line.

In the seventh inning Chicago made two runs on a base on balls, a sacrifice, Tinker's three-base hit, and McChesney's double. The score:

THE TWO CANDIDATES.

When D CADY HERRICK declares, as he did declare in the short speech to his friends and neighbors after his nomination, that if he were elected Governor he should be willing to listen to counsel, but would be wholly his own master, it means a great deal more than when FRANK WAYLAND HIGGINS says the same thing. It means more to men who by study and observation try to make out what sort of man a candidate is.

The deeper meaning of the Democratic candidate's words is imported by character and circumstance. D CADY HERRICK is of firm mental temper, tenacious of opinion, willing the world should know what he thinks, and he has been a fighter all his life. He has striven against bosses and machines for more than a generation. He was a Tilden Democrat, and so naturally came into conflict with Tammany. He was a supporter of LUCIUS ROBINSON, whom Tammany defeated in the Governorship contest of 1879 by nominating and voting for JOHN KELLY. He was a Cleveland Democrat, and so, after 1888, came to be an opponent of DAVID B. HILL. He fought against the snap-convention folly in 1892, as he has fought against all un-Democratic usurpations and misusings of power. In Democratic politics the sound side, the right side, the side espoused by the best opinion in the party has found in him a sturdy champion.

In these somewhat strenuous years Mr. HERRICK has exhibited qualities that serve now to project his personality in strong lines upon the screen. It is all summed up in the one word independence. He is and has always been independent of boss control and boss dictation. He does not need to take his ideas or his plans of action from other minds. The resources of his own mind are sufficient for their production. He is not of the pliant kind that always agrees with you in conversation. He differs, disputes, sets up his own views and is rather stiff-neckedly set in maintaining them. Anybody can see that all this implies and proves courage, for courage is of the very essence of independence.

Upon what occasions and in what towns has Lieut. Gov. HIGGINS exhibited independent opinions and the courage to stand by them? That he is in high office and nominated for a higher one under the iron boss-ship of BENJAMIN B. ODELL is an ill argument as to the stuff his soul is made of. Submit or stay at home is the Odell law. Mr. HIGGINS has not stayed at home. Indeed, he took some personal precautions against continuous residence in Olean. In Mr. HIGGINS's home county there is a rural population strongly antagonistic to any expenditure for canal improvement. On the subject of the canals, therefore, Mr. HIGGINS has kept pretty mum; he has a rather colorless record. But the greatest political and economic issue before the people in recent years has been the $101,000,000 canal deepening. If Mr. HIGGINS had convictions he has usually managed to suppress them.

That is a poor augury for a Governor who if he serve at all will serve under the continuing boss-ship of ODELL. Unlike ex-Gov. HILL, Gov. ODELL does not retire from politics on Jan. 1 next. Mr. HIGGINS is the personal candidate of the Governor-Chairman, was nominated by him, is beholden to him for his political present and future. What must the voter conclude as to the probability of an extirpation of Odellism by such a Governor? There is inefficiency, there is malfeasance, there is corruption at Albany. It has grown up under ODELL. There has been a misuse of public institutions all over the State to strengthen the Odell machine. Would Mr. HIGGINS put an end to these abuses? Would there be any hope, the smallest, of any change whatsoever at Albany if the Republican candidate were chosen?

These are the questions the voter must ask himself. He must answer them honestly unless he really wants to deceive himself.

THE ALTERNATIVE.

We have received from M. BUNAU-VARILLA, ci-devant Minister of the Republic of Panama at Washington, and negotiator of the treaty between that infant State and the United States, a copy of a letter addressed by him to Le Temps of Paris, correcting certain statements in that journal. In the course of the letter, which is a fervent defense of his action in the premises, M. BUNAU-VARILLA makes an emphatic reference to one point which President ROOSEVELT has deemed it wise to suppress entirely in his account of the matter.

After describing the motive of the Colombian Congress in adjourning without ratifying the extension of the concession to the French Canal Company—namely, its intention to confiscate the property of that company—M. BUNAU-VARILLA goes on to say: "Moreover, in adjourning without ratifying the Hay-Herran treaty, the Colombian Congress, in its frenzied desire to get possession of the property of the French Company, in 1904, through a Judaic interpretation of contracts, rendered inevitable and immediate the application of the Spooner law to the United States, which peremptorily directed the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, strongly desired and very popular, in case of any check in the negotiations with Colombia."

This is a very plain and accurate statement of the situation created by the refusal of Colombia to ratify the canal treaty. It does not, of course, agree with Mr. ROOSEVELT's declaration in his letter of acceptance that "criticism of [his] action in this matter is simply criticism of the only possible action which could have secured the building of the canal." Nor does the President's assertion agree with the clear language of the law itself. The motives of M. BUNAU-VARILLA, of the French Canal Company, and of the revolutionists of Panama are perfectly intelligible. They wanted the United States to build the Panama Canal, and that only. The "inevitable and immediate" consequence of the President's obedience to the Spooner law would defeat that desire. The motives of the President in refusing to carry out the law are not so plain. He has never consented to explain them. Whatever they may be they cannot excuse his disobedience.

FUTILE INSPECTORS.

Impudent is about the only word one feels like applying to the report of the local Steamboat Inspectors regarding the Slocum disaster. It is devoted to elaborate condemnation of everything they had nothing to do with and praise for the things for which they are responsible. The life-saving appliances especially come in for approval, though the evidence before the Coroner was conclusive that they were scandalously insufficient in quantity, in quality, and in condition. To meet this apparent incongruity the Inspectors declare that they were unable to get the Coroner as a witness, and that the failure was important because he was the custodian of the "relics" of the disaster.

Coroner BERRY, in a statement to The Evening Post of yesterday, says that this assertion is the reverse of true, that he was during the "investigation" by the Inspectors always within call, and would have responded to a summons by telephone at either of his two offices or his residence, to say nothing of a subpoena; that he sent to the Department of Commerce a complete transcript of the testimony taken before him, and that he sent all the "relics" to Inspector DUMONT after the close of the inquest.

We believe the following from the finding of the Coroner's jury to be a temperate and accurate statement of the facts; it explains why the local Inspectors prefer to suppress or misrepresent those facts:

> That on board said steamboat on June 15, 1904, there was a wholly improper and unsuitable fire-extinguishing equipment, * * * as well as an insufficient number of good and available life preservers and other life-saving appliances, properly to secure the safety of the persons on board the said vessel in case of disaster; and that this condition existed when, on May 5, 1904, Assistant Steamboat Inspector of Hulls HENRY LUNDBERG inspected the vessel and approved of its fire-extinguishing and life-saving equipment, apparatus, and appliances.

It is to be recalled also that the Federal Grand Jury has already indicted Inspector LUNDBERG and his assistant for neglect of duty.

A MODEL PARTISAN.

The Hon. ISAAC B. ALLEN is an aspirant for the Republican nomination to Congress in the Eleventh Massachusetts District. He is what is known in the curious lingo of that State as an Afro-American, which does not necessarily mean that he is an African immigrant, but only that he has a strain of negro blood in his veins. The other day he submitted himself to the ordeal provided for candidates for nomination in the old Commonwealth, and appeared to discuss his claims with other candidates before the voters of his party in the district.

Naturally he regards the "race question as the most vital question," but his conviction is not based on selfish regard for himself or his race. It is a tribute to the Republican Party. "The black vote keeps the Republican Party in power. Stop the negro from voting and the Republican Party would go down into oblivion," which is a truth to which the President of the United States is extremely alive. With this view of the situation, Mr. ALLEN's devotion to his party can be understood. It is as ardent as Mr. ROOSEVELT's, and as unquestioning. Certain people in Massachusetts, especially tradesmen whose love of gain is not so completely subordinated to their party loyalty as is that of Mr. ALLEN and Mr. ROOSEVELT, are agitating the question of a revision of the tariff. This, according to Mr. ALLEN, is foolishness: "The tariff question has been settled forever, because the Republican Party will never go out of power, and it will never touch the tariff, so that is a dead issue." Mr. ALLEN's audience greeted this simple exposition of the tariff situation with laughter, possibly because it put in thirty words all that Mr. ROOSEVELT managed to say in 3,000 on the same subject. As for reciprocity, Mr. ALLEN was "for once with HENRY CABOT LODGE." "If Canada wants reciprocity, she must pay three times what we give her."

Mr. ALLEN's definition of his personal aspirations also had a touch of Roosevelt an temperament. "If you wake up the morning after the caucus and find that I have slipped in, don't be surprised, because I believe in GOD and the other fellows don't." And as for his loyalty to the party which "does things," his comprehensive declaration has the genuine White House ring: "I am a stand-pat Republican. If you put the d—l up and labeled him a Republican, I'd vote for him."

NASON AND THE ALLIANCE.

The resignation of Mr. NASON from the Presidency of the Building Trades Alliance does not surprise those who have recognized his inability to control the union leaders represented in its management and who thought him unwise to essay a task for which he was temperamentally unfitted. He assumed the office with what is generally believed to have been an honest and disinterested purpose to bring the dead-lock to an end. He might as well have tried to extinguish a conflagration by shedding tears upon it. The body of irreconcilables over whom he presided were as much beyond his control as so many wild horses. He would have been of service to the unions he officially represented if it had been in his power. It was not, and in refusing longer to lead what he could not fail to see was a lost cause he has done wisely and best served the interests of those he represented. More significant than his own resignation is the withdrawal of his union, the marble cutters, from affiliation with the alliance. There are evidences of a break-up all along the line, and it will be impossible for the combination of walking delegates to much longer maintain any considerable number of their following in idleness. The weather is getting cold, the wives want suitable clothing, the children need stout shoes, and all want more and better food than idleness brings. The walking delegate has "had his innings," and it will be some time before he has them again.

THE SOUTH AND COTTON.

The question of the future price of cotton is one of great interest to a great many people; but it is one concerning which the widest differences of opinion exist. Mr. D. J. SCULLY, who is perhaps somewhat discredited as a prophet by reason of his identification with speculation for its own sake, is predicting fifteen-cent cotton within a few months. His views as to the limitations of the South as a cotton producer are well known and need not be repeated here. Of more immediate interest are the opinions of Mr. HENRY C. KITTREDGE expressed in a paper read before the New England Cotton Manufacturers' Association now in session. He is of the opinion that the South is capable of raising all the additional cotton needed to meet the increasing consumptive requirements of the world, but doubts if it will do so, largely by reason of the fact that it feels more interest in developing other sources of wealth and of diversifying its crops. He believes that the South will have reached the practicable limit of its cotton-raising power when it has thirty-five millions of acres under cultivation and is producing annually from fifteen to seventeen millions of bales. As the area available for cotton growing is estimated at about 300,000,000 acres, it would seem as if somewhat more than 10 per cent. of it might with advantage be devoted to the crop for which its advantages are unique and for which it has a worldwide market. It is a grave question whether the doctrine of the diversification of crops so industriously preached for so many years applies to the South, since if it can raise cotton to better advantage than it can raise corn and other grains it will better repay the employment of capital and labor to raise cotton and buy corn. Mr. KITTREDGE's argument seems to us very much like false reasoning. He says:

> This number of acres, 35,000,000, devoted to the culture of cotton, I regard as prophetic of the limitation of the amount of land that the South can economically give to this one agricultural product. It would not, as I view the industrial and commercial welfare of the South, contribute to the prosperity of that section of our country, to devote a larger proportion of cotton area to its husbandry, to the neglect of other agricultural pursuits, many of which are identified with the comfort and material well-being not only of the farming, but of the entire, population. To do so would be like a man putting his eggs all into one basket. It would concentrate capital and productive energy too strictly into one occupation, which is contrary to all good rules of economics, as every one knows. This number of acres would be that of giving one acre in every eight or eight and a half, on the average, of the available cotton area, to this single crop, which would exert such a predominating influence over the affairs of the people that should they meet with a period of depression in trade, the effect would be calamitous from which recovery would be slow. One acre in every eight leaves none too much for diversified agriculture or for a rotation of crops, as good farming requires. Every cotton planter should produce, at least, what is consumed on the premises by his live stock, so far as the soil and the climate will allow him. His hay and grain, vegetables, fruits, dairy produce, &c., should be of his own raising, and this done he would not have a great amount of land left for cotton, even assuming that this was the only farm produce that he cared to market.

Within the past twenty years the world's consumption of cotton has practically doubled—from 7,450,000 to 14,400,000 bales of 500 pounds each. Should consumption continue to increase in like ratio during the next twenty years the world's requirements by the end of that period would be nearly 22,000,000 bales. This is quite within the limits of probability. Either consumption will be checked and substitutes for cotton found or from five to seven million bales must annually be had from other than American sources. Neither result would be to the advantage of the South. The restriction of cotton growing to maintain prices on an artificial level would be an economic mistake of the most serious character.

SOFT COAL SMOKE.

Frequent complaints reach this office of official negligence in the enforcement of the provision of the law forbidding the burning of soft coal in New York. This involves a misapprehension. We know of no such law or ordinance. Proceedings against those who create a nuisance by the burning of soft coal must be brought under the second clause of Section 96 of the Sanitary Code, which reads:

> Nor shall any such owner, lessee, tenant, occupant, Superintendent, manager, engineer, fireman, or any other person cause, suffer, or allow smoke to escape or be discharged from any such building, place, or premises, or from any engine or locomotive used therein or thereon.

In other words, a consumer may use all the soft coal he pleases in New York if he does so without creating or maintaining a nuisance. Some do this; more do not. Meanwhile the growth of the use of soft coal in New York is a matter of trade comment, and it is also a grievous nuisance in many places. If there is ground for complaint of official neglect of the public interest in this respect it is not because the burning of soft coal is not stopped, but because it is permitted under conditions which create nuisance.

Some concerns burn soft coal because it is cheaper than anthracite. This is the case in the vicinity of New York, where there is a great surplus of soft coal. Some of this can be had at $2.25 per ton by the cargo, up to $2.60 for better grades, and a ton of good soft coal is more economical than anthracite of the smaller sizes, ton for ton. The small sizes of anthracite used for steam are known as pea and Nos. 1, 2, and 3 buckwheat. Good pea coal is $2.80 to $3 a ton by the cargo. No. 1 buckwheat is $2.10 to $2.50; No. 2 $1.40 to $1.85, according to quality, while No. 3 runs at $1.40 to $1.50 per ton. The available quantity of good grades of these smaller sizes is not large, while, as stated above, there is plenty of soft coal. In many plants there is used a mixture of bituminous and anthracite to keep the smoke nuisance within bounds. To this there is no objection if, with proper appliances and intelligent firing, no smoke is produced. The fact remains, however, that there is a great deal too much soft coal smoke in the air of New York, and that there is less vigilance in enforcing the above quoted provision of the Sanitary Code than the public interest demands. Citizens who suffer inconvenience from this would do well to assist the Health Department to the extent of making specific complaints and supporting them with evidence. We have no knowledge of such complaints failing to receive prompt and effective attention.

F. CARRUTHERS GOULD.

With to-morrow's issue THE TIMES will introduce to its readers—or to those of them not familiar with current English caricature of the higher class, to whom he will need no introduction—Mr. FRANCIS CARRUTHERS GOULD, an artist of unique reputation and of varied talent.

Mr. GOULD is in his line what Mr. MAX BEERBOHM is in his—a satirist in spite of himself, an artistic illustrator of the humorous incongruities and absurdities of public life. He is looked on in England as the best-natured of satirists, with no bitterness in his fun, but with irresistibly telling acuteness and insight. He is the most effective of the opponents of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN's antique and grotesque scheme for taxing the English people into prosperity; and he is withal a writer of no mean skill. We are confident that he will contribute substantially to the entertainment and enlightenment of our readers.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Surely never before did such a question as the one whether certain revenue stamps should be big and pink or small and green stir one of the two great parties in all its heights, if not in quite all its depths, or threaten to exert a decisive influence in determining the political complexion of Congress, if not the result of the Presidential election itself. The Administration, it is credibly reported, is seriously embarrassed by the necessity, at a most inconvenient time, either to continue advertising the supposed excellencies of the wares made by the "Tobacco Trust" or to give public and very practical support to the large contention of the "independent" manufacturers that domestic cigars are just exactly as good as those imported from Cuba. No compromise is possible, and between taking one side or the other there is no difference of danger; or, if there is a difference, it is small and extremely hard to discover. The first impulse, naturally, was to defy the trust and grant the favor asked by the independents. No sooner, however, had the first step been taken in that direction than things happened—things so numerous and so momentous that the wisdom of further consideration impressed itself strongly on the administrative mind. The first step has been retraced and the original situation restored, with, alas, all of its original opportunities for making a fatal mistake still presented. In this situation the public takes only a purely sporting interest. The chance that the big pink stamp may be abolished does not alarm it, nor has it a ponderable desire that a small green stamp be granted at the demand of the independents. The public is moved only to grin at both the rivals and at the reluctant arbiter of the quarrel. It knows that whatever the end it will have to pay the bill, and that cigars of every grade will remain abundant. It scorns the claim that it needs the help of a stamp in discriminating between good cigars and bad, and it watches the war in cruel amusement at the sufferings of all the participants.

—Commissioner MCADOO's statistics of street accidents in the August of this year as compared with the same month in 1903 reveal little and prove nothing. The total number of such accidents—432 for 1903 and 380 for 1904—show a decrease of 52, which is satisfactory so far as it goes, especially when one remembers how fast the city is growing, but it does not go very far, and the other figures given by the Commissioner seem to indicate that the new means and devices for protecting the public from what are usually the consequences of its own carelessness have not been anything like as effective as the praise which we have all bestowed upon them has been enthusiastic. For in the decrease of 52, only 11, or less than a fifth, were due to improved police methods of controlling street traffic. This appears from the fact that accidents of the kinds to be affected by such control—those, that is, in which persons were struck by street cars, trucks, carriages, automobiles, and other vehicles, or were injured while riding in them—numbered in 1904 only 11 less than in 1903. Indeed, some of these accidents, including those caused by automobiles, have increased, most of the gain having been made by the street cars and the trucks. Considering the amount of talk there has been about the scorching automobilists, it is distinctly surprising to notice that the Commissioner's table credits, or discredits, those machines with causing only five accidents in 1903 and eight in 1904. For single months that is quite enough, but it is manifest that more of the rage against the automobiles is felt by people whom they have scared than by those whom they have injured. Street accidents, however, are queer in that they are by no means most numerous in the places where the obvious opportunities for them are greatest. Certainly the most dangerous place in New York is the space in the New York entrance of the Brooklyn Bridge, where multitudes of people in dense crowds are almost constantly crossing at grade a dozen tracks over which electric cars move in constant procession at considerable speed. Yet the disasters there have been strangely few, and the few rarely serious. As a matter of fact, people are usually hurt or killed in places where they think they are safe, not where the perils cannot be ignored or forgotten.

—What is certainly a very promising plan, and perhaps the most promising yet suggested, for giving immediately a full-time day to all the children desirous of attending the public schools, is announced for immediate trial by the Board of Education. It is extremely simple, being nothing more than the concentration of the two highest grades of the elementary course in buildings of their own, and leaving all the other buildings for the exclusive occupancy of children in the really primary grades. At present scholars at all stages of progress below that marked by the high schools are in each building, with the result that the higher classes, being comparatively small, have more room than they need, even in the districts where the lower classes are most crowded. Obviously, space can be economized segregating the higher classes—that is, by creating schools ranking between the primary schools and the high schools. These will be rather widely placed, and the children attending them will have more of walking or riding to do than at present. This, however, their age will enable them to do without causing much, if any, of the anxiety that parents would feel if their younger children had to make daily journeys of considerable length. Of course, there is nothing new or startling in this scheme, the separation involved in it having long been common in many parts of the country—being, indeed, much more common than the housing of primary and intermediate pupils in the same building in what has hitherto been the New York fashion. The extent to which the proposed change will remedy the existing evils of overcrowding remains to be demonstrated by experience. That it will do some good is evident, and if it still remains necessary to have a fraction of the pupils in part-time classes, there is consolation in the thought that for the youngest children the shortening of the regular school hours is more likely to be a benefit than a disadvantage. Many children, especially in large cities, are sent to school at too early an age, and many more are injured in mind and body by compulsion to work too hard after they get there. Even for babies, however, school is better than some homes, and that fact must be considered in connection with the other fact that schools are not intended to be convenient repositories of offspring or channels for the distribution of municipal charity.

—Already the acquittal of men arrested for participation in the lynchings at Indianola and Huntsville has begun. We have no reason to believe, and no desire to suspect, that the trials thus ended were other than fair and honest, but in the circumstances it is extremely strange that innocent men should have been subjected to the humiliation, if not the peril, of appearing at the bar of justice charged with black crimes. The identity of the persons really guilty of these crimes is thoroughly well known to practically all the inhabitants of the two towns, and therefore there is presented the painful alternative of choosing between the conclusion that the testimony at the trials was perjured or that the prosecuting officials took care to apprehend only those whose conviction they knew to be impossible. Deserved respect for the Southern courts inclines a distant observer to the latter theory as preferable to the former.

Telephoning in Abyssinia.

From The London Telegraph.

Abyssinia is being provided with the telephone—another advance, surely, of civilization. Nearly 300 miles of wire have been put up, and 1,000 more are in process of construction. It would seem, however, that the contractor who is doing the work for the Abyssinian Government has had to encounter unusual difficulties. Tropical rains wash out the poles, white ants eat away the parts in the ground, and when iron poles are substituted for wood the natives steal them to make tools of. Monkeys find the wires delightful swings, while elephants use the poles as scratching posts, and often knock them down. Lastly, the jungle grows so fast that a party of men is kept constantly employed in cutting away the young growth. Altogether the telephone constructor's life in Abyssinia is not a happy one.

Women as Whalers.

The London Field describes a whale hunt in Shetland when several hundred of the animals appeared in the bay while all of the men and most of the women were away herring fishing.

Several boats, however, went out, one of them being that of the schoolmistress, who was accompanied by some of her pupils. The boats succeeded in driving a large number of whales ashore. "I had nothing but an old bayonet," says the writer, "and getting it, the work of spearing was entered upon till no fewer than eighty-six whales were secured. A lady with a pitchfork also helped for a time, but her strength was soon used up, and I had to desist from sheer exhaustion, else a few more might easily have been added to the grand total.

"The whales realized 2s. a head and 3s. 6d. a hundredweight for the blubber. This is the largest 'hunt' for many years, and the unique feature is that the majority of the captors were women."

Not the Togo We've Seen.

From The London Globe.

It will come as a blow to scores of people to learn that the portraits of Admiral Togo which have appeared in the illustrated papers are not those of the great man himself, but of a Rear Admiral bearing the same name. At least so says a Manchester paper. This notion of being photographed by deputy recalls Mr. Anstey's suggestion that popular authors who happened not to be physically beautiful would do well to hire handsome substitutes to represent them on occasions of social festivity.

No Blondes 600 Years Hence.

From The London Globe.

A Prof. Mason states that "fair-haired girls are disappearing; in less than five centuries there will be no blondes left." This imminent peril is as alarming as the rumor that we have only enough coal for 50,000 years.

FREDERICK PFLUGER.

New York, Sept. 22, 1904.

A JUST AND HONORED JUDGE.

What a Study of Judge Newburger Revealed to a Juror.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read with peculiar interest yesterday morning in your editorial column the splendid note of approbation in regard to the claims of Judge Newburger for the nomination to the Supreme Court bench in succession to Mr. Justice Freedman. It must be a source of pleasure to every public-spirited citizen to see fidelity to duty on the part of members of the judiciary properly rewarded by continuance in and promotion to higher spheres of judicial experience.

Some five years ago I served as a trial juror in the Criminal Court, where Judge Newburger was then presiding, spending two weeks as an interested spectator. It afforded an opportunity to study him closely as he disposed of the various cases during that term of court, and if a word of personal testimony may be permitted I desire to give it in highest praise of the admirable manner in which the business of the court was conducted. He was ever ready to temper justice with mercy, and when appealed to by a juror on any doubtful point of evidence was most painstaking in sifting every scintilla of testimony bearing thereon. Suffice it to say his decisions were characterized by a degree of fairness to counsel, care for the rights of the people of the State and prisoner at the bar, making his auditors to feel that the majesty of the law was splendidly upheld in the court in which he presided. I do not permit myself to doubt the sentiment favoring his candidacy will grow and gather force with each succeeding day until the ticket is nominated and placed in the field bearing the name of Judge Joseph E. Newburger as an inspiration to him to continue his sworn obligations, and as a further pledge of the devotion of the people of this county to a just and honored Judge.

DEMOCRATIC STATE TICKET.

Republican Cry of Alarm.

From The Cleveland (Ohio) Leader, (Rep.)

If it took many conferences, much strong language, and notable concessions from ardent advocates of others to bring about this result, it would be unwise to deny that the fruit is worth the strife. Herrick has a good record and a clean one. Democrats, aforetime, have profited by Republican error made manifest in Empire State politics. This year may prove another example of bad leadership, or rather bad dictatorship, in the dominant party. There is no use in mincing matters. It behooves the National campaign managers of the Republican wing to discount, by every legitimate means, the advantages now resting with the Democrats so far as Gubernatorial candidates are concerned.

Best Practicable Choice.

From The Waterbury (Conn.) American, (Ind. Rep.)

The nomination of Judge Herrick at Saratoga was probably the best practicable choice open to the convention. For Republicans whose stomachs are turned by Odell and the odor of Odellism in the Higgins candidacy so respectable a Democratic candidate as Judge Herrick offers a sufficient alternative.

Victory Assured.

From The Rochester Union, (Dem.)

The convention, admirable in its every feature, rose to sublime height when its selection for the head of the ticket cleared the atmosphere of every possible doubt as to the cohesiveness of the party in this its brighest year of a decade. The wisdom of the action will be shown at the polls. Victory for the Democratic Party in this State is assured.

Effective Appeal to Independents.

From The Buffalo Enquirer, (Dem.)

Democracy has ample reason to felicitate itself over the results achieved at Saratoga. The work of the convention has been well done. The State ticket is in every respect an excellent one. The platform is a powerful and inspiring declaration. Factional differences are set at rest. The party is united. Its winning chances are greatly increased. Both in policy and the personnel of the nominees the Democrats of this State have made an effective appeal to the independent vote.

Of the Highest Character.

From The Baltimore Sun, (Dem.)

The New York Democrats have nominated as their candidate for Governor a man of the highest personal character—Justice D. Cady Herrick of the State Supreme Court.

Brings Inspiration and Hope.

From The Utica Observer, (Dem.)

The nomination of Judge D. Cady Herrick brings with it inspiration and hope to the party in this State. The nomination is a strong one, and one that will correspond exceedingly well with the nomination of Judge Parker for the Presidency.

Why All Albanians Approve.

From The Albany Times-Union, (Dem.)

But apart from political connections both independents and Republicans of Albany find satisfaction in the nomination of Justice Herrick because of the good they know of him, the abilities which they have learned are his, the integrity which they have observed as stamping all his acts, and the sterling qualities which they fully realize are molded into his character and which make him the highly respected man, citizen, and Judge that he is to-day.

Reunited, Militant Party.

From The Rochester Herald, (Dem.)

These nominations were made not only without bitterness, but in a spirit of harmonious enthusiasm almost unprecedented in a State Convention. They reveal, so far as New York State is concerned, a reunited, militant Democracy, which has already, so far as it can be accomplished in the naming of the candidates, carried the State for Parker and Davis.

No Spot Upon His Record.

From The Erie (Penn.) Herald, (Dem.)

The Republicans cannot find a spot upon the character of Candidate Herrick. His fitness for the high office for which he has been chosen is universally conceded. He represents the best type of citizenship, is honest and independent, and his election will give to New York such an administration as it needs to undo the mistakes and drive out the corruption of Odell's arbitrary rule.

Another Stolen Picture.

From The London Standard.

ROME, Sept. 21.—A valuable antique picture of the Crucifixion, of Grecian workmanship, was stolen on Saturday night from the Cathedral at Osimo. A Roman art dealer who has business transactions with American and English collectors is known to have lately visited the cathedral, and he has been arrested on suspicion of having committed the theft. The picture has not been recovered. The Government has ordered that a strict lookout be kept for the treasure at all frontier stations.

"OVERMARRIAGE" IN THE ARMY.

One View of Gen. Corbin's Recommendation to War Department.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If it is "not right to demand of a young man without fortune that he shall assume the obligations of celibacy if he elects a military career," as THE TIMES suggests, is it not putting a premium upon the social evil? Will not such unwritten laws foster acts of social immorality among those whom THE TIMES and Gen. Corbin had in view?

Then, what is the remedy?

(1) It should not be expected that every young army or naval officer should affiliate with the "army and navy clubs" and circle in and around the City of Washington and other places.

(2) It should not be expected of every young army officer that he is to "entertain" beyond the "rim of his shilling."

(3) Our military circles are becoming and have been too much patterned after the European idea, where the people are taxed to death in order to support feathers, gold lace, and frills of the European Court and army circles.

(4) Contrast the military circles of the Revolutionary war, when all men were on a level with every other man; contrast the recent military operations in South Africa, when a few stubborn Dutch Generals defied the best and largest army that the modern world has ever seen. Those old fellows all had wives and "olive branches." To taboo marriage in army and naval circles is to put a premium upon the "social evil."

Instead of the "expenses incidental to" the young army officer's "position" eating up his salary, the conditions and social usages which bind the army and navy clique, like the phylacteries of the old Jew, should be loosened and changed.

NEGLECT THE CUBAN TRADE.

American Manufacturers Indifferent to Needs of Natives.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The statistics given in your article on Cuban importations in yesterday's issue do not surprise me. Our manufacturers have shown indifference or ignorance in their efforts to secure the Cuban trade, and I offer the following illustration to prove my assertions. During January and February I traveled along the north coast of Cuba, and had an opportunity to study the inhabitants and realize their requirements.

I observed that men and women alike possess very small feet, with a highly arched instep. One and all complained that there was no room for their insteps in the American shoe, and, as the makers were too indifferent to study their needs, they bought French shoes.

Another fact which surprised me was that all the butter used came in sealed cans from Copenhagen, (which I have been informed is made in Sweden, sent to Copenhagen ready for export,) treated in such a manner as to resist the tropical temperature and remain presentable on the table without ice.

I did not see a single pound of American butter in fifteen towns I visited.

In most of the dwellings I found a pitcher containing a well, and the water therefrom containing a high percentage of lime, making it a very hard water for laundry purposes, and yet borax and the American laundry soap are not on sale. Why?

Many of our well-known medicines have no place on the shelves of the drug stores, and I wondered why not. It appears to me that if we are to compete successfully with our English, German, and Spanish friends for the Cuban trade we must study the requirements of the natives, and the results will probably surprise many who have not thought the field profitable.

A Mosque for London.

From The London Express.

A mosque for London's 2,000 Mohammedans will shortly be built in central London.

For years past Mohammedan missionaries have been trying to spread a knowledge of Islamic teachings, but their efforts have been handicapped for want of a central mosque.

Robert Williams, F. R. I. B. A., received a commission from a Turkish pasha to prepare the plans, which have been dispatched to Constantinople for the approval of a committee of pashas. Ultimately they will be submitted to the Sultan.

"The mosque," explained the architect to a press representative, "is intended for all Mohammedans in London—Indian, Egyptian, Afghan, and Persian, as well as Turkish, for King Edward VII., it must be remembered, rules over more Mohammedan subjects than any other sovereign."

It will be an imposing structure, in red and yellow stone. The decorative work will be carried out in marble and jasper, and a broad flight of steps in marble, granite, and jasper will lead to the great central entrance.

A graceful minaret, surrounded by galleries whence the muezzin will call "the faithful" in London to worship, is a notable feature of the design. The minaret is surmounted by a cupola, and the golden crescent will be 200 feet from the ground.

A Long Rest.

From The Detroit Free Press.

"How long have you been out of work, my good man?" asked the head of the household as he parleyed with the rusty-looking caller.

"I was born in '68, Sir."

Took the Profits.

From The Detroit Free Press.

"I remember Schemer was a great chap for thinking out plans for getting rich. I suppose now he's wealthier than any of his friends."

"Oh, no; his friends used the plans while he was dreaming over them."

ARCHBISHOP'S SPECIAL TRAIN IN COLLISION

J. P. MORGAN ALSO IN PERIL

Members of Party Badly Shaken Up, but Only a Maid Is Hurt—Accident Occurs at East Brookfield, Mass.

EAST BROOKFIELD, Mass., Sept. 23.—While speeding at a rate of sixty miles an hour, a special train bearing his Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Randall Thomas Davidson, the Archbishop of Canterbury, from Bar Harbor to Washington, crashed into a detached locomotive on the Boston and Albany Division of the New York Central Railroad near here this morning. The two cars of the special remained on the track, but both engines were wrecked.

The Archbishop and the members of his party, which included J. Pierpont Morgan, were badly shaken up, but none was injured except a maid, whose face was slightly cut. Besides the Archbishop and Mr. Morgan, the party included Mrs. Davidson, the Rev. Hyla Holden, vicar of Windsor; the Rev. J. Ellison, the private secretary of the Archbishop, and attendants.

The special train was one engaged by Mr. Morgan on behalf of the Archbishop, and was in charge of Conductor John Fox of Worcester and Engineer John Lord of that city. The branch engine was just over the switch on the main line, when the locomotive of the special appeared around the curve about 100 yards distant.

The engineer of the special sighted a danger signal and set the airbrakes sharply, but owing to the high speed of his train and the slippery condition of the rails could only slightly check his locomotive, and with a terrific crash it struck the local engine. This, being much lighter than the other, was picked up on the pilot of the special and carried over about 300 feet of track and then dropped in a heap. The wreckage completely blocked the east-bound track.

Lord's engine kept the irons for some distance, but finally the wheels struck the ties and tore up the roadbed. The engine was badly damaged, but it was not overturned, and when it stopped it was interlocked with the ruins of the branch locomotive.

None of the occupants of the train had left their berths except Mr. Morgan, who was at the breakfast table when the crash came. Large plate-glass mirrors in the cars were broken, as were also several of the breakfast dishes. Mr. Morgan was suddenly thrown forward, but was not pitched from his seat.

Soon after the cars came to a standstill Mr. Morgan hurried into the East Brookfield station and sent several messages. When asked as to the effect of the collision on those in the cars, he said:

"There was an accident and no one was injured. Get this over the wires as soon as possible—that no one was injured."

The Archbishop and party did not leave the car until just before the journey was resumed. Dr. Davidson had nothing to say, but his secretary, in a brief statement, said that no one had been hurt. He also gave a list of the occupants of the special.

The railroad officials sent a combination locomotive and coach, known as the Berkshire Observation Car, to draw the two special cars to Albany, and the journey of the special was resumed at 9:50.

ALBANY, N. Y., Sept. 23.—The Archbishop of Canterbury arrived here at 1:20 o'clock this afternoon, four hours late. He and his party were met at the Union Station by Bishop Doane and Mrs. Doane, Coadjutor Bishop Nelson, and Dean Talbot of All Saints' Cathedral, and several prominent citizens.

After introductions were over the party drove to All Saints' Cathedral. The visitors inspected this and the buildings connected with it, and met the Episcopal clergymen of the city.

The original plans had included a formal welcome by Mayor Gaus and the celebration of matins, but on account of the delay in arrival the Mayor did not meet the Archbishop and there were no ceremonies.

After spending an hour here the English Primate and his party left over the West Shore Railroad for Washington. Bishop and Mrs. Doane and their grandson, Doane Gardner, went with the party as guests of J. Pierpont Morgan.

The Archbishop of Canterbury and J. P. Morgan passed through Jersey City at 7:35 last evening on their way to Washington. Their private car, the Colonial, was run on to Track No. 5 of the Pennsylvania Railroad and attached to two private cars of the President of the Michigan Southern Railroad.

Mr. Morgan descended to the platform for a few moments. He and the Archbishop said they had been badly shaken up by the accident, but had not been injured. Mr. Morgan added: "I think we are in safe hands now and need fear no further accidents." The train pulled out for Washington at 8:02.

Bishop Henry C. Potter, Mayor McClellan, and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, have accepted invitations to speak at the dinner to be given by the Church Club to the Archbishop of Canterbury at 7:30 o'clock Tuesday evening, in the Hotel Astor, Times Square, Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Streets. Whitelaw Reid also is expected to talk. President Roosevelt, the Bishop of Long Island, and the British Ambassador, who were invited, have notified the committee that previous engagements will prevent their attendance. Among others who have been asked and may be there are Morris K. Jesup, President of the Chamber of Commerce; Coadjutor Bishop David H. Grier of this diocese, the Duke of Newcastle, and the Bishops of Connecticut, Albany, and Newark.

The Archbishop himself will make an address, in which he is expected to give some views of special interest to the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country. The following Sunday he is to preach in Trinity Church, Broadway and Rector Street, but before that he will have taken part in some exercises at Columbia University, besides attending the Episcopal Diocesan Convention and reception Wednesday. While in New York, where he will arrive from Washington Monday, he will be the guest of Bishop Potter or the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix.

More than 400 men are expected at the Church Club dinner. About 150 out of the organization's 500 members have procured tickets, and invitations have been sent to all the New York clergy entitled to seats in the convention, numbering more than 250.

J. P. MORGAN, JR., COMING HERE.

This, However, Does Not Mean That His Father Will Retire.

The report that J. P. Morgan, Jr., is coming over from England within a short time and has taken a house for the Winter was confirmed by a member of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. yesterday. On the authority of the same member it may be stated that it is not true that this means that the senior Mr. Morgan is to retire from business, to be succeeded by the son.

The house taken by J. P. Morgan, Jr., is in the vicinity of his father's residence, and it has been leased for four months only.

ANNUAL RUSH AT PRINCETON.

Freshmen Meet Sophs for Traditional Conflict, but Elect Officers.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Sept. 23.—The annual opening rush at Princeton to-day proved one of the most fierce on record, although few serious accidents occurred.

At noon the freshmen assembled in the old gymnasium for the first class meeting, while the sophomores stood around to keep the 1908 boys from entering. With great difficulty the freshmen elected the following officers: President—F. W. Ritter of Lawrenceville; Vice President—R. S. Baker of Princeton Preparatory School; Secretary—Walter Phillips of Hill School.

After the meeting an open fight took place while the freshies paraded up Nassau Street.

The annual cannon rush to-night ended the day of hostilities, and many a student lay down with aching bones. The sophomores assembled around the old revolutionary cannon while the freshmen gathered on University Place. Directed by the juniors, the entering boys formed a phalanx and charged the mass about the cannon, which was slowly revolving. For several moments a fight with 300 on a side raged in earnest, when one large freshman forced his way through the mob and touched the cannon.

A shout arose, "Run for your lives!" and the freshmen scattered in all directions, closely pursued by the sophomores.

CONGRATULATIONS FOR DEWEY.

Yesterday Fiftieth Anniversary of His Entrance Into the Navy.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Admiral Dewey was at his desk in the Navy Annex Building as usual this morning, but had hardly sat down and begun to look over his mail before a telephone bell rang, and Secretary Morton called him up to offer his congratulations on reaching the fiftieth anniversary of his entrance into the naval service. There was no particular observance of the day, but all day officers called to tender their congratulations, and many civilians also showed their remembrance of him and the occasion.

While the Admiral is the only member of his class still in the naval service, and only seven are on the retired list, he is the picture of health and vigor. He is very fond of outdoor life and prefers his country home to the conditions of his town residence. He keeps a number of fine horses, most of them high-bred trotters, and he and Mrs Dewey are seen every afternoon driving along the beautiful suburban roads.

WILL TALK INDUSTRIAL PEACE.

Distinguished Men to Speak at Civic Federation Luncheon.

Industrial peace will be the subject for discussion at a luncheon on Monday next at the Hotel Astor, which will be given by the Executive Committee of the National Civic Federation in honor of the foreign members of the Interparliamentary Congress, who are now the guests of the United States Government. This congress has just closed its annual session, after having discussed international arbitration. The Executive Committee includes Grover Cleveland, Andrew Carnegie, and Oscar S. Straus on the part of the public, Henry Phipps and August Belmont, representing the employers, and Samuel Gompers and John Mitchell for the wage earners.

The speeches are to be informal in character. Richard Barthold, Chairman of the committee of congress on the interparliamentary union, and J. J. Garoner of the House of Representatives will speak for America. For Austria Vladimir Ritter Landslaus V. Gnieewosz, member of the Reichsrath, will speak. For England the speakers will be W. Randal-Cremer, M. P., Honorable Secretary of Group, and others. For France M. Paul Strauss, Vice President of the French Group and Senator, as well as others will speak. For Germany Prof. Hoffmann, member of the Reichstag, and Mr Hauptmann, member of the Landtag, will speak. Hungary, Italy, Norway, Roumania, Sweden, and Switzerland will also be heard from.

There have also been invited twenty-five labor leaders of France, who are sent to this country by their Government to study industrial conditions in the United States.

BRITISH HONOR WASHINGTON.

Members of Interparliamentary Union Place Wreath on Tomb.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—The members of the Interparliamentary Union arrived here to-day from Niagara on their special train. After breakfast the visitors viewed the city and then embarked on a boat for Mount Vernon.

While the rest of the delegates stood bareheaded around the entrance to the tomb of Washington the Hon. Philip Stanhope, M. P., the President of the British parliamentary group, entered the tomb and placed on the sarcophagus containing the remains of Gen. Washington a superb ivy wreath decorated with cut flowers. A card attached to the wreath bore the following words:

"Placed by the British group of the Interparliamentary Union upon the tomb of George Washington, a son of their own race, in respectful admiration of his noble life and illustrious services to his country and to the world."

A representative of the Belgian group followed by depositing on the tomb a sheaf of wheat wrought in metal.

To-night the delegates paid their respects to the Ambassadors and Ministers of their respective countries here.

PROTECTING THE PUBLIC.

American Consuls Expose Methods of Unscrupulous Promoters.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—In the course of their routine reports some of the American Consuls have recently had occasion to admonish their people at home against investment in alluring enterprises projected in the countries in which the Consuls are located until they have made thorough investigation of the alleged facts contained in the prospectuses. The result has been to bring upon the department a flood of indignant remonstrances from a number of promoters of various schemes, mostly located in the tropics.

Unwilling to do an injustice to any enterprises of real merit, the department has caused inquiry to be made in most of these cases and has ascertained that the warnings sent out by the Consuls are invariably fully warranted. So it is understood that with a view to the protection of the American public the American Consuls will hereafter give special attention to such enterprizes, and the facts will be officially disclosed where it appears that a fraud is being practiced upon the public.

WILLED BRAIN TO CORNELL.

Physician Dies Who Had Specialized on His Own Case.

Dr. George S. Conant, fifty-one years old, died suddenly early yesterday morning at his home, at 148 East Eighteenth Street. He had been a sufferer from diabetes for many years.

Dr. Conant had been treated by specialists from all parts of the country, and when they extended no hope of cure he took up the study of his case personally, using himself as the subject for experiment. He came to the conclusion that the disease had its root in the brain, and made a will, in which he directed that at his death his brain be turned over to Cornell University.

Dr. Conant was a graduate of the Bellevue Medical College.

GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCES ANNUAL RUMMAGE SALE

Goods Are All Imported—Quality Is Another Question.

MANY QUEER THINGS ON LIST

You Can Buy Anything from Paving Stones to Automobiles at Sale of Unclaimed Goods.

Catalogues were issued yesterday for Uncle Sam's annual clearance sale, and any one who thinks that he is not a merchant in a very large way of business need only look at this catalogue to be undeceived. The Government this year offers 948 lots at unreserved auction, and the lots comprise everything from a second-hand overcoat or a suit of clothes to a high-power automobile. Between these there is pretty nearly everything that can be found in an up-to-date department store, and a good many things that no department store handles.

The sale is the annual auction of unclaimed and abandoned imported goods which have fallen into the hands of the customs authorities either because their owners did not consider them valuable enough to pay the duty on them, or because the consignees could not be found. The total value of the goods to be sold amounts to about $25,000.

Lot No. 1 is described as "two cases of stationery, damaged," and is valued at $50. What the stationery represents is not disclosed. Near the top of the list is one case of paving blocks which the appraisers say is worth $1, and next to it on the list is a log of wood valued at 50 cents.

Any one who wishes to start housekeeping can fit himself out with most of the supplies at the sale. There are several lots of chinaware, flour, wine—much of it sour—and cheese. Lot 65 consists of forty-nine pounds of butter, which was worth $7.25 when it was exported, but which Col. N. H. Storey, in whose charge it is, very modestly values now at $2.45. There are also canned meats, almonds, raisins, and a bag of beans, which the catalogue naïvely declares are edible, valued at $1.

Some of the more valuable lots are 845 gross of buttons, valued at $338; eleven cases of milk punch, $100; a case of metal thread and silk trimmings, $230; fourteen bales of hemp, $553.70; 10,000 cigars, $500, and 193 gallons of wine, $135.10.

Of course there are all sorts of things to drink, but most of them are open to suspicion on the score of quality.

The sale will be held in the Seizure Room on the tenth floor of the Appraisers' Stores on Tuesday, Oct. 4, and the goods may be seen there next Wednesday and Thursday.

MILITIA COAST ARTILLERY.

General Staff Plan for Co-operation with the Regular Army.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Assistant Secretary of War Oliver has taken up a proposition from the General Staff looking to the preparation of heavy artillery of the organized militia in time of peace for the duties of coast artillery in time of war. The initiative in this scheme rests with the State authorities, though the War Department is willing to co-operate upon request.

Details of the plan are set out in letters which Acting Secretary Oliver has addressed to the Governors of all the coast States, and that addressed to Gov. Odell of New York is a fair type of the others. In this letter the recommendation of the General Staff is given to the effect that the heavy artillery in the militia should be confined to cities in the near vicinity of coast fortifications; that it should be instructed in the use and drill of the smaller rapid-fire guns; that the officers should be instructed in sighting, fire direction, communications, and in signaling; that they should listen to lectures at their armories by regular artillery officers.

The Acting Secretary says this double instruction will require much sacrifice and hard work on the part of the militiamen, and even then in time of war they probably will come to the coast defense ports comparatively ignorant of their duties, but a commanding officer in war with one relief of regulars and one relief of intelligent militia will soon be able to train them into an efficient garrison.

BANKERS' FIGHT FOR RAILROAD.

Kuhn, Loeb & Co. Seek to Get the Vera Cruz from Speyer & Co.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 23.—Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the New York bankers, by their attorney here, filed a bill in the Circuit Court this afternoon, excepting to the sale of the bonds of the Vera Cruz and Pacific Railroad to Speyer & Co. by Receiver Allan McLane of the Maryland Trust Company. In the petition the exceptants offer $90,000 more for the bonds of the railroad than was offered by Speyer & Co.

They state that the bonds were sold for 88½, and at a private sale, and they ask that the sale be not ratified by the court. They make a formal offer in the bill for all of the bonds, and express their willingness to pay 90 for them.

BOLL WEEVIL STILL RAMPANT.

Naturalist Employed by Miss Helen Gould Fails to Conquer the Insect.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Sept. 23.—Isaac W. Brown, "The Hoosier Bird and Bee Man" of Rochester, Ind., who several weeks ago was a guest at Roxbury of Miss Helen Gould, and so impressed her with his knowledge of nature that she sent him to Texas to study the habits of the boll weevil, is in this city and spoke to the children of the public schools on "Nature."

Mr. Brown did not remain long in the South. A very short investigation of the boll weevil question convinced him that in order to become at all conversant with the habits of that pest one would have to remain at the side of the newly laid egg and watch its development until the time when it begins, as a full-grown insect, its devastation of the cotton boll, and he so reported to Miss Gould. With the report that he rendered Miss Gould agreed and determined to let the matter of the boll weevil drop.

Believing, however, that the intimate knowledge of birds and bees gained by Mr. Brown in the course of fifty years' study of the ways of nature would be invaluable to the people of this part of the country if he were allowed to impart it, Miss Gould engaged the Western naturalist at a stated salary, and has given him a letter addressed to School Principals and Chairmen of farmers institutes in New York and New Jersey, introducing the bearer and offering his services as a lecturer to those who care to take advantage of it.

SCHOOL WATER TASTED OF GIN.

How a Greenwich Janitor Sterilized the Drinking Supply.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Sept. 23.—Water smelling of gin has been furnished to the children of the Havemeyer Public School during the past week for drinking purposes, and the Principal and teachers are coming in for much criticism from the parents on account of it.

When school opened there were many complaints of the water, which is low in the reservoir. Principal Knight appealed to Janitor Ahern, in the boiler room, for a way out of the trouble, and the result on Monday was an abundance of boiled water. Pails of this water were placed at the drinking places in the school corridors and the children were instructed by the teachers to drink no other. It was not long before all were talking of it. Some said it tasted of witch hazel, others of whisky, and they went home and told their parents.

An examination of the conditions under which the water was sterilized showed that the janitor used gin barrels, and, although he cleaned them as well as he could, it is admitted that the smell remained to a certain extent. When school opens next Monday different water will be provided.

He had lived all his life at Paterson, and for forty years was prominent in everything which went to make up the history of the town. Politically he was long a leader in the Republican Party. WOULD ABOLISH THE NEW YORK TENEMENT

Dr. Maxwell Tells Educators at St. Louis It Destroys the Home.

ADVOCATES ITS ERADICATION

Suggests Erection by the City of Model Homes Amid Pleasant Surroundings for Workingmen.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 23.—The international congress of arts and sciences was to-day addressed by Dr. William H. Maxwell, Superintendent of the Public Schools of New York City, who was the principal speaker in the sectional meeting of the Department of Education.

After observing that no school was doing perfect work without physical culture in the form of play, gymnastics, athletics, and manual training, Dr. Maxwell went on to declare that even if every schoolhouse in the city were used at all reasonable hours for the purposes of recreation and improvement, the measure would still fall far short of counteracting the tenement-house evil.

"The tepement house," he said, "destroys the home, and without the well-ordered home and its influences the school can accomplish comparatively little. Nothing short of a revolution in the existing tenement-house system will restore the life of the poor in the City of New York to something like normal conditions.

"And how is this to be accomplished? I answer unhesitatingly that the tenement house, as it has been known in New York City, must be eradicated. The municipality should employ its credit to purchase tracts of unoccupied land upon which to erect model homes for workingmen amid pleasant and sanitary surroundings, and rent or sell them at a moderate profit.

"But there is still another aspect of physical education. Education, whether physical or mental, is seriously retarded if not practically impossible, when the body is improperly or imperfectly nourished. What a farce it is to talk of schools providing equal opportunities for all when there are hundreds of thousands of children in our city schools who cannot learn because they are always hungry!

"The schools of Paris provide a simple, wholesome midday meal for their hungry children. In many places in the British Islands the same thing is being done. Should we do less in the cities of democratic America? In no other way can we be sure that the schools will, as far as education may, provide equal opportunities for all."

Dr. Maxwell advocated governmental registration and inspection of all private and parochial schools to the end that no school may be permitted to exist which does not teach its pupils the English language and the elementary duties of citizenship.

IN THE SHOPS.

There are all sorts and kinds of things in Russian brasses, which are decorative as well as useful, and which are to be had at comparatively low prices. A big fourteen-inch candlestick, with saucer, costs $2.50.

Nuremburg decorated brass or copper is a little different from the ordinary and in graceful shapes. A twelve-inch tankard of copper, with brass handle and decorations on the cover, tin-lined, costs $6.75.

A large piece is a wine cooler, with a tall standard, a floor piece, which raises the cooler a convenient distance from the floor. It is graceful, made of copper and brass, and costs $31.

Wine coolers are to be found in different sizes, and a pretty, low one can be found for as little as $5.20. It is very decorative.

Seven-light candlesticks in the solid brass, from ten to eleven inches high, and adjustable, that the lights may be arranged straight across or at different angles, cost $2.50.

Griffin candlesticks cost $1.25 each.

In the Nuremburg brass there is a quaint piece called a cider jug at $9.50. This is in a quaint shape. It is sixteen inches high, tapering in from the bottom to half its height, where it bulges out and curves in again, and there is a slender pitcher-shaped top. The handle is below the bulge on the lower part of the jug.

Odd in shape is what in Russia is used for an incense burner. There is a large globe-shaped base in which are set a number of trumpet-shaped pieces, receptacles for incense in its original use, but on this side of the water made to do duty as flower holders. There are five of these on a vase, which costs $6.

Brass ferneries which are always good—and there is nothing more generally decorative—cost from $1.75 up to $7.50. These are low dishes with feet and rounded sides. The smallest size is a five-inch—the diameter of the opening. The six-inch is $2.50, seven-inch $3.50, and so on up.

Speaking of ferneries, there is a pretty one of bronze. The dish proper is of crystal, supported at the sides by four female figures of the bronze, joined by slender bands of metal, over which droop chains of the bronze. There is an outer edge and bronze feet. It is an ornamental dish, and with the glass dish inside is serviceable, and costs $11.50.

Those toasts on square brass plaques which have been seen framed, are being used for a new purpose. They are mounted upon screens, and are most effective. One of these is a three-fold screen, made of the dark oak on mission lines. There are panels of the wood across the top, and in the centre of each of these is set one of the brass plaques with its appropriate motto. The lower part of this screen is hung with a red leather in a soft tone. The screen costs $22.50.

Here is a pretty dressing gown for a man to use in a warm room, if not for warm weather. It is of pongee, simply made, tying with a silk cord, to match the pongee, around the waiast. The inside is lined with a soft India silk in a rich crimson color. The gown will launder, which is one of its many advantages. It costs $20.

Here is a quaint little liqueur set on the Tobey order. There are two different sizes, the smallest costing $2.50. It shows a quaint little man in colored pottery for the bottle or jug, his hat the pottery top of a cork. There are half a dozen little steins, a couple of inches high, in place of glasses, each having a cherubic little face on one side, and with a hanadle at the back. There is a small pottery tray. The size next larger costs $4.

PICTORIAL REVIEW OF THE WEEK'S NEWS.

Hy. Mayer's amusing pen-and-ink comments on current events will be, as usual, a feature of The Sunday Times.

CHIEF JOSEPH DEAD.

"The Napoleon of Indians," Whom Gen. Miles Finally Subdued.

SPOKANE, Washington, Sept. 23.—Chief Joseph, the famous Nez Perces warrior, is dead. To-morrow, at the Indian reservation near Spokane, his funeral will be attended by thousands of mourners. The end came as the chief was sitting by his campfire on the Colville Reservation. Suddenly he toppled over to the ground, and before aid reached him his heart had ceased to beat.

His death removes the most notable figure remaining among all the Indian tribes. He first came into prominence in 1877, when he refused to turn over the Wallowa Valley, in Oregon, to the whites. The valley had been allotted to the Nez Perces Tribe by President Grant in 1873. In 1875 the allotment was revoked, and Gen. O. O. Howard attempted to enforce Chief Joseph's evacuation. At the head of his people he succeeded in eluding Gen. Howard, but he was cornered at Big Hole Basin by Gen. Gibbons, and a desperate battle followed. Gen. Gibbons was wounded and his force repulsed.

Chief Joseph escaped through Yellowstone Park to Clark's Fork Pass, but Gen. Nelson A. Miles trapped and defeated him.

Upon his surrender Joseph declared that he would fight no more against the whites, and religiously he lived up to his promise. He enjoyed the highest respect of all who knew him. Gen. Miles termed him "the Napoleon of Indians."

Chief Joseph paid two visits to New York in the course of his life. His first visit was in 1897. He was again in the East last Fall. At Washington President Roosevelt received him, and he presented a petition that his people again be allowed to occupy the Wallowa Valley. He was recently in St. Louis, where he was paid every attention while inspecting the World's Fair.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Gen. Harrison Allen was found dead from heart disease in his chair in his apartments this morning. Gen. Allen was appointed Deputy Auditor for the Post Office Department in 1901. Yesterday he attended to his duties as usual.

Gen. Allen was born in Pennsylvania in 1835. At the outbreak of the civil war he volunteered, and was at once elected Captain of his company. In November, 1862, he organized the One Hundred and Fifty-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was elected Colonel. He was breveted Brigadier General for meritorious service, and was especially complimented for gallantry and efficiency by Gens. Doubleday, Meade, Reynolds, and Ord.

On the expiration of his term of war service Gen. Allen returned to Warren, Penn., and resumed the practice of law. In 1866 he was elected by the Republicans a member of the State Legislature, serving two terms. In 1869 he was elected to the State Senate, and in 1872 was elected Auditor General. He was re-elected to the office in 1874.

President Arthur appointed him United States Marshal for Dakota. In 1886 he was elected Chairman of the Territorial Central Republican Committee, and was a prominent candidate for Governor.

Later Gen. Allen returned to Pennsylvania, and resided there until the time of his appointment as Deputy Auditor for the Post Office Department.

The body of Dr. Curtiss will be taken to the United States on the Atlantic Transport liner Minneapolis, sailing from London for New York to-morrow.

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—Dr. Samuel Ives Curtiss was senior professor of the Chicago Theological Seminary and a leading Presbyterian churchman of the West.

A letter from Zurich, received on Wednesday, told of Dr. Curtiss's indisposition, which prevented the delivery of an address before the International Congress at Basel. Dr. Curtiss went from Zurich to London, intending to sail to-morrow for New York.

Dr. Curtiss was returning from Syria, where he had spent several months annually since 1898 in the study of primitive Semitic religions. He left Chicago in June, and in spite of his advanced age, sixty years, made the journey alone.

For twenty-six years Dr. Curtiss occupied the Chair of Old Testament Exegesis in the seminary. During the last six years of his life he was President of the City Missionary Society.

Besides several translations he published a number of important books.

He was a member of the Republican County Committee, President of the Kings County Republican Club, and a member of the Levi P. Paint Trade Aroused Over Restriction of Turpentine Output.

May Attack Producers' Organization Under the Inter-State Commerce Law—Convention to Discuss Plan.

The entire paint trade is aroused over the action last week of the National Turpentine Operators' Association in deciding to curtail the production of turpentine 10 per cent. during the coming year, and plans are being considered to retain counsel to attack the association under the inter-State commerce law on the ground that its action has been in restraint of trade.

The matter will be considered at the annual convention of the National Paint, Oil and Varnish Association, which meets in Buffalo on Oct. 11, 12, and 13. In the meantime, it is said, the Standard Oil Company and other large concerns interested in the paint trade are considering the feasibility of securing their own sources of turpentine supply.

Turpentine, which is an essential in paint-making, is now quoted at 55 cents a gallon, which is the highest rate this year. In March, 1902, it was quoted at 31 cents, and about that time the policy of curtailment was adopted by the Turpentine Operators' Association. The association then decided that the output should not be increased, and in 1903 the same resolution was passed. This year, however, it decided to cut the output 10 per cent. A similar advance has taken place in rosin, also a pine product, and grades which sold in 1902 at 80 cents a barrel and last year at $1.25, are now quoted at $3.05.

Birch Bark Boats Dutiable as Toys—Other Decisions.

In a decision written by Gen. T. S. Sharretts, the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday overruled a protest by C. G. McCoy, consignee for the Moore & Gilson Company, against the action of the Collector at Plattsburg, N. Y., in classifying diminutive birch bark canoes as toys at 35 per cent. The importer alleges that they are ornaments and souvenirs, and should pay 20 per cent. as non-enumerated manufactured articles. Gen. Sharretts decides that, as they are largely dealt in by wholesale toy dealers, they are dutiable as toys.

General Appraiser De Vries writes a decision partly sustaining protests on sixty-five invoices by Neuss, Hesslein & Co. of New York, on woven fabrics of flax, flax and cotton, and of cotton, assessed at different rates under the Constable clause of the tariff law. Lower rates were claimed under the same clauses. Other protests partially sustained were by French, Foise & Co. and J. C. Klein, New York.

Protests overruled were by G. Hirsch's Sons, J. & H. Rosenberg, the American Express Company, B. Ullmann & Co., and Michaelis & Rohman, New York. Protests sustained were by Ernst Leitz, Chicago, and Duff & Benton, New York.

Will Appeal Wheat Decision.

It was announced yesterday that the Treasury Department had ordered an appeal taken from the recent decision of the Board of United States General Appraisers, that frozen wheat imported from Canada for cattle feeding purposes is dutiable at 10 per cent. ad valorem, as a non-enumerated unmanufactured article, instead of at 20 cents a bushel as "wheat."

INSTRUCTION.

A Boy That Failed

to make progress at a noted New England academy entered the Groff School recently with several having had similar experiences at other large schools. They were all put into Yale and other large colleges the following September without a condition, one year ahead of their former classmates, and their present standing at college is very high. Mr. Groff's experience with these boys is typical of the success he has had for ten years.

THE GROFF SCHOOL,

228 West 72d St., New York,

now occupying the most handsome school quarters in New York, is ideal and exceptional as a boarding and day school. School home conducted somewhat as a fraternity house.

No young and inexperienced teachers to experiment with students.

Absolutely individual attention, the number being strictly limited to 25. No very young boys admitted. Handsome study parlors, billiard room, electric elevator, and full and free use of skating rink, bowling alleys, fencing hall, gymnasium, &c.

Proper and judicious supervision of the daily life of all students of the school, but all foolish school discipline, military drill, and consequent loss of time eliminated.

Term begins Sept. 28th.

Second Consolidated Income Bonds, due Jan. 10, 1939,

MEXICAN CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY, LTD.

In conjunction with the Mexican Central Railway Securities Co., Ltd., which owns $37,500,000 of the Consolidated Mortgage Four Per Cent. Gold Bonds of the Mexican Central Railway Company, Ltd. (being upwards of a majority of such bonds now outstanding), we have for some time past been making efforts to secure the protection of the interests of the bondholders. In our opinion, these have become seriously jeopardized and the time has now come for united action.

We have, therefore, at the request of the Securities Company and other holders of the Four Per Cent. Gold Bonds and Income Bonds, consented to act for the purpose of protecting the interests of the bondholders of all classes, and to undertake, should it become necessary, the preparation of a plan for the reorganization of the Railway Company or the readjustment of its securities.

Holders of bonds of the Railway Company of all classes are requested to deposit their bonds with the EQUITABLE TRUST COMPANY, NO. 15 NASSAU STREET, NEW YORK, Depositary, or with its agents in London, SPEYER BROTHERS, or its agents in Boston, the ADAMS TRUST COMPANY, or its agents in St. Louis, the MERCANTILE TRUST COMPANY, under an agreement dated May 12, 1904, which has been signed by us. Deposits of Collateral Trust 4½ per cent. Bonds will also be received by Messrs. HOPE & CO., Amsterdam, and of other classes of Bonds by Messrs. TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS BROTHERS, Amsterdam.

Certificates of Deposit will be issued for deposited securities, and application will be made in due course to list these on the New York and London Stock Exchanges.

The agreement, copies of which may be obtained at our offices or from the Depositary, provides that holders of Certificates of Deposit will be entitled upon surrender of their certificates to withdraw without charge the securities represented thereby within twenty days after publication of notice from us that a plan and agreement has been approved by us and lodged with the Depositary.

We urge the prompt deposit of securities in order that their value may be properly protected, and reserve to ourselves the right to terminate the privilege of deposit at any time without previous notice.

NEW YORK,
SPEYER BROTHERS,
LONDON.

NEW YORK AND LONDON, MAY 12, 1904.

To the Holders of the Capital Stock of the MEXICAN CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY, Limited:

In view of the large floating debt of the Company, of the recent effort to classify the Board of Directors without previous notice to the stockholders, and of the published call by Bankers for the deposit of bonds for the protection of the interests of the bondholders of the Company, it seems necessary that a committee should be formed for the protection of the interests of the stockholders, and we have, at the request of holders of considerable amounts of stock, consented to act as such committee.

An agreement for this purpose has accordingly been prepared, dated May 24, 1904, copies of which can be obtained at the office of the Depositary, Central Trust Company of New York, No. 54 Wall Street, New York City, and at the agency of the Depositary, Old Colony Trust Company, Ames Building, Boston, Mass.

Holders of stock may deposit the same under said agreement with the Depositary in the City of New York, or in Boston at its said agency. Stock deposited may be withdrawn, without charge, as provided in the agreement. THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Under present conditions the markets depending upon growing weather ought to rise when the thermometer falls, and vice versa. But yesterday's temperature, promising to increase the supply of staples, was accompanied by higher prices, and the stock market acted with similar unreason, for it rose when the advance in the staple market called for a decline. Of course, very few look for logic or consistency in markets, but for the benefit of those few who like to see prices and conditions move with that consistency which is expected of newspaper writers it may be remarked that the markets which moved inconsistently with each other responded normally enough to conditions controlling them specifically. Wheat was strong chiefly on the nervousness of shorts lest the French demand might be stimulated by a reduction of customs; cotton was sustained by speculation, assisted by the arrival of the cold wave in the South; and those who have thought the stock market strengthened by manipulation found nothing to weaken that opinion yesterday. Union Pacific was again a favorite, and the Southern group rather surpassed the Grangers in both activity and strength.

Of serious news there was scarcely a ripple. A leading summary of the iron trade was almost optimistic in its account of conditions. Sterling was a shade firmer and money was a trifle softer. Their interrelation is interesting enough, and should be studied in connection with the price of gold in London. It will not be easier to get bullion, as exchange rules against London, and both Paris and Berlin lowered their rates yesterday as much as we advanced ours. London was good enough to inform us that we were to have a good bank statement to-day. Local experts thought differently, and really it does not make very much difference just now which is right. More significance attaches to such incidents as the purchase of $9,000,000 Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis 4 per cents by the two leading houses which have done most of this business since the era of indigestibles. They are buyers to sell—without the reproach too often attaching to that operation—and they are not likely to buy under conditions in their opinion unpromising. A better price for money and a better price for securities is not necessarily inconsistent, when it is understood that the money is wanted for the most legitimate of uses and that its scarcity is the fault of our legislators rather than of conditions other than statutory. The difference between this year and last is more striking than the similarity. The cause of dear money rather than the fact which is remote enough as yet is what should be most thought of. Money promises to be dearer presently because conditions are improving, not because they are deteriorating.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Sharp Recovery in Union Pacific—Many Traders Work on Bull Side Again.

A number of traders who had been making efforts to accentuate the weakness which the market had shown on several recent days without meeting with as much success as they desired were yesterday working in the opposite direction, and were buyers of stock in the early part of the session. The way the market moved during the afternoon proved very satisfactory to this element, which came to the conclusion that even at the present level the task of advancing prices is very much easier than the majority seem willing to admit. Much is said about the necessity for further reaction and the impossibility of the market being held up very long, but again yesterday, at least in a few of the leading stocks, the reports from the floor were to the effect that the buying was much more impressive than most of the selling.

Accumulation of Stocks.

Accumulation is a phrase which is much used these days in the current discussion of the movements in more than one important stock. Steady buying, often in sufficient volume to maintain the prices of some particular issue in the face of a generally opposite tendency, is said to be the only explanation of some of the recent incidents of this kind, and even in conservative quarters the opinion is expressed that more stocks than Union Pacific are being bought with other purposes in view than mere investment of funds. Among the other stocks which are thought to be governed by such operations is Atchison, which, it is said, is still being acquired by the same banking interests which were credited with purchasing much of the stock that was sold at lower prices than those now prevailing.

Union Pacific Resumes Leadership.

Union Pacific was again the most interesting feature of the trading. The stock was heavily dealt in, and no trace of the hesitation which the stock had shown on Thursday was displayed yesterday. The buying was called very good, and it was said of the selling that if the stock was going where it seemed to be going the sellers would probably find that they had done the wrong thing. Encouraged by the previous day's decline in Union Pacific, a good many traders contested the advance to par, some of them selling stock quite freely, but there was no chance later to get the stock back. The close was very near the best of the day, and the net gain amounted to 2 points, a good deal more than the stock had lost on Thursday. The Street is still hearing that, despite previous failures, a way has been found by which the Northern Securities stockholders can get their dividends, and by some the strength of Union Pacific is said to be based on the expectation of some such arrangement being made.

Betting on Anaconda Dividend.

Amalgamated Copper picked up a little yesterday, but the fact that speculative interest was not converged on the stock to any great extent was evidenced by the small transactions, which scarcely exceeded 12,000 shares. There is still much talk about the Amalgamated Copper dividend and about those on its subsidiary stocks. Fuller, Holzman & Co. were offering yesterday to buy the next dividend on Anaconda at an advance over the rate of the last dividend.

St. Paul-Atchison Rumor.

In connection with the advance in Atchison, currency was given to a report that the stock was being acquired in the interest of the St. Paul system, which was said to be seeking by this means an outlet to the Pacific Coast, which some time ago the St. Paul was reported to be about to secure by building a line of its own.

CHICAGO WHEAT PIT EXCITED.

December Delivery Up 3½—Intimation of Big Export Demand.

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—In a whirl of excitement wheat for December delivery to-day advanced to a point 3½ above yesterday's closing quotations.

Notwithstanding heavy receipts in the Northwest, the market opened firm, December being up ⅛c to ¼c, at $1.10⅝ to $1.10¾. Initial quotations on May were ⅛c lower to ¼c higher, at $1.12⅛ to $1.12½. From $1.10⅝, at which price December sold soon after the opening, an advance to $1.11¾ was made, May in the meantime selling up to $1.12⅞. The market then broke under fair realizing sales, and toward the end was drifting rather aimlessly, when suddenly trading became wildly active. News from abroad was considered extremely bullish. Shorts, alarmed at the prospects, were instantly anxious buyers. With light offerings, prices rose rapidly. One of the main features in the foreign situation was a rumor that the French Government was contemplating the removal of the import duty on wheat. Another factor was the announcement made by a well-known foreign crop statistician to the effect that the requirements of importing countries this year would be the heaviest on record. Final quotations on December were at $1.13⅜@1.13⅝. May closed at $1.14⅝@$1.14¾.

TOBACCO PLAN OPPOSED.

Legal Action Likely to Prevent Merger of Allied Companies.

Wall Street heard a report yesterday that opposition was developing to the plan of the managers of the Tobacco Trust for the consolidation of the American, Consolidated, and the Continental Tobacco Companies. Who the opposing security holders are does not appear, and Directors of the Consolidated Tobacco Company said they had not heard of any opposition.

Nevertheless, it is learned that the controlling interests are making an active canvass for proxies for the meeting called for Sept. 30 to act on the plan. Announcement of the plans of the opposition, which will probably take the form of legal action, will, it is said, be made on Monday.

CURRENCY MOVEMENT.

Reviewing the movement of currency during the week, The Wall Street Journal says:

The reported movements of currency this week indicate a loss of $5,167,400 in cash held by the banks.

They received from the interior $3,490,400 and sent to the interior $8,870,800, of which there was transferred through the Sub-Treasury $1,726,000 to New Orleans, $500,000 to San Francisco and $200,000 to Chicago. The loss to the interior was $5,380,400.

Receipts of new gold were $1,490,100, namely: $819,000 on New York Assay Office checks, $236,100 on Seattle Assay Office checks for Klondike gold, and $135,000 on San Francisco Mint checks and telegraphic transfers.

Ordinary disbursements by the Sub-Treasury were $20,130,900; payments by banks to the Sub-Treasury for customs, internal revenue, 5 per cent. redemption fund, &c., were $21,408,000. The loss to the Sub-Treasury was $1,277,100.

The total loss to the interior, $5,380,400, and to the Sub-Treasury, $1,277,100, was $6,657,500; deducting the gain of $1,490,100 new gold, the net loss was $5,167,400.

The net loss to the interior of $5,380,400 is not only the largest for any week this year since the crop movement began, but is also larger than the net loss in any week for the corresponding period in any former year. The shipments were chiefly to the South. There was sent to Canada $500,000 and not quite $1,000,000 to the West, aside from the transfers through the Sub-Treasury. Receipts were practically all from nearby and Eastern points.

Receipts of foreign gold from San Francisco were nil, the $135,000 on San Francisco Mint checks and telegraphic transfers representing domestic bullion.

The decrease from the preceding week in the loss on Sub-Treasury operations was chiefly due to the increase in pension payments, which were $2,866,000, comparing with $773,000 in the preceding week, and to the decrease in customs collections, which were $3,187,000, a daily average of $531,000, comparing with a daily average of $646,700 in the preceding week.

The Sub-Treasury received from banks and sent to Washington for redemption $3,352,000 mutilated currency.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—Supplies of money were ample in the market to-day, and the demand was small. Discounts were steady.

Prices on the Stock Exchange generally were depressed on profit taking before the settlement and fears of trouble with Russia owing to the contraband difficulty. They closed with an improvement.

Consols sagged, owing to lack of support and the expectation of fresh issues of stock, despite the good position of the Bank of England.

Americans opened dull and rallied slightly, but the tendency was undecided, though there was some hardening. Ontario and Western was the feature. At the close trading was rather dull.

Foreigners declined on account of lack of Paris support.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Sept. 23.—Business on the Bourse to-day opened dull, but subsequently became better. The market closed firm. Russian Imperial fours were quoted at 93.40 and Russian bonds of 1904 at 501.00.

Three per cent. rentes, 98f 5c for the account; exchange on London, 25f 20c for checks.

TRADE CONDITIONS.

Concerning the situation and outlook in general trade, Dun's Review says:

Trade expands steadily as confidence increases with the harvesting of the crops, and mercantile collections are less tardily met. Lower temperature stimulates the demand for Fall and Winter wearing apparel, and there is more disposition to prepare for the future rather than to confine operations within the limit of immediate requirements. This improvement is extending to all departments of manufacture, and in the aggregate there is less idle machinery than at any recent date. Settlements of labor disputes have helped in the development of this favorable condition.

There is no evidence of anxiety among consumers of iron and steel to place large orders or to secure quick delivery, yet the tonnage gradually expands, and it is evident that the lowest point of the depression has passed. Production steadily increases, prices are more readily maintained, and the number of pending contracts promises well for the future. It is difficult to point to any one division as the leader, improvement being of a general character that is most wholesome. The railways are exhibiting more interest in structural steel, and the building trades will require a large quantity as soon as there is an end of alarm regarding labor disputes. Steel rails are in light demand for home consumption, but exports to Canada are stimulated by the approaching increase in tariff.

Liabilities of commercial failures thus far reported for September amounted to $6,731,786, of which $2,739,362 were in manufacturing, $2,709,233 in trading, and $1,283,191 in other commercial lines. Failures this week aggregated 225 in the United States against 232 last year, and 30 in Canada compared with 19 a year ago.

Bradstreet's reviews the situation as follows:

Cold weather, while retarding or injuring some late crops, has been stimulating to Fall trade, both wholesale and retail, which shows an apparent increase in volume over a year ago. The improvement is most marked in dry goods, clothing, groceries, shoes, and hardware. Distributive trade is better in the Northwest, portions of the East, and very generally throughout the South. The Central West also shows a continuance of the improvement noted last week, and a widespread moderate betterment in collections is a feature deserving special mention. A disposition is shown on the part of farmers to hold their products for better prices, this being true in many sections, notably the South and the Northwest.

The labor situation is rather quiet on the whole, although some notably large strikes continue unsettled. Among the industries some improvement is to be noted in the cruder forms of iron; buying of pig iron is rather better, particularly in portions of the West, but finished products fail to respond liberally to recent price reductions.

Bank clearings for the week ended with Sept. 22 aggregate $2,138,786,807, one-half of 1 per cent. over last week and 30 per cent. over last year. Exchanges outside New York City total $831,259,549, 1.8 per cent. over last week and a gain of 3.7 per cent. as compared with last year.

Wheat, including flour, exports for the week ended Sept. 22 aggregate 864,373 bushels, against 935,834 bushels last week, 3,050,430 bushels this week last year, 5,077,070 bushels in 1902, and 4,470,352 bushels in 1901. From July 1 to date the exports aggregate 16,260,490 bushels, against 36,214,681 bushels last year, 59,010,135 bushels in 1902, and 74,127,105 bushels in 1901. Corn exports for the week aggregate 667,339 bushels, against 429,158 bushels last week, 779,239 bushels a year ago, 74,952 bushels in 1903, and 585,706 bushels in 1901. From July 1 to date the exports of corn aggregate 6,836,669 bushels, against 11,606,280 bushels in 1903, 891,727 bushels in 1902, and 11,224,693 bushels in 1901.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Trading on the curb was carried on yesterday on a more restricted scale, and the bond department furnished the feature of the session. Fractional improvement developed in a number of the more important stocks, particularly Interborough Rapid Transit and the Seaboards. There is a report current that the last-named securities are to be listed in the near future. Guggenheim Exploration stocks were strong and the warrants advanced 2 points on a single sale and the full paid sold at 112.

AMERICAN TOBACCO 6s were heavily traded in and showed a larger total than has been seen in any single issue in many weeks. Opening at 107½, the bonds quickly advanced to a new high record, and, after selling off on profit taking, again advanced to the top figure and closed there for a new gain of ½, after sales in over $600,000. The new preferred stock sold up to 83⅛ and closed there for a net gain of ½ on few transactions.

The principal transactions in 100-share lots reported in the outside market yesterday, with high, low, and last prices, were as follows:

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Large Corner Sold on Bradhurst Avenue—Good Volume of Minor Transactions in Flats and Vacant Properties—Peculiar Auction Offering Listed for To-day.

Bert G. Faulhaber & Co. have sold for Mrs. B. M. Chars the northeast corner of Bradhurst Avenue and One Hundred and Fifty-first Street, a plot 125 by 100. The buyer is a builder who will erect three six-story flats on the property.

The New York Presbytery has sold the plot, 90 by 99.11, on the south side of One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Street, 85 feet east of Edgecombe Avenue, to William Picken, who will erect thereon five three-story dwellings.

Irons & Todd have sold, through A. L. Mordecai & Son, to Louis and Mayer Cohen, the plot, 50 by 201.10, running through from One Hundred and Thirteenth to One Hundred and Fourteenth Street, 95 feet east of Manhattan Avenue.

To Sell Old Roadbed at Auction.

An auction sale of peculiar character has been announced for to-day, at noon, at the Real Estate Salesroom, 161 Broadway. The offering consists of the interest of the estate of Richard Somerindike in the bed of an old lane or road, which, according to the advertisement of the sale, was about twenty feet in width and ran west from Broadway a distance of about 400 feet, at a point somewhere near Seventy-sixth Street. The published description of the property, however, places the southerly side of the lane 193 feet north of Seventy-fifth Street and the northerly side 37 feet south of Seventy-sixth Street, so that real estate men who have tried to locate it on their maps have found the task an impossible one. On the south side of Seventy-sixth Street, about midway between Central Park West and Columbus Avenue, the bed of this old Somerindike road overlaps the front of several lots to the extent of a few feet. Seven or eight years ago the interests of the Somerindike heirs at this point were sold at auction, the present lot owner in each instance buying as much of the old road bed as abutted on his property.

The attention of residents and would-be settlers on the West Side is called to the fact that on the first of the present month Mr. Vreeland, president of the N. Y. City Railway Co., announced the inauguration of a new West Side Line of travel via Amsterdam Avenue, which, by means of transfer, opens up all the North, South, East, and West city surfaced lines to the residents of the Upper West Side for a single fare, and shortens the time of transit from 125th St. to Houston St. between 10 and 15 minutes.

Watching for Fugitive German.

Commissioner of Immigration Williams received a letter yesterday from the authorities of Feldsburg, Germany, asking that a watch be kept on incoming steamships at this port for Anton Jenner of that city, and that he be arrested when found. The letter says that Jenner decamped with 235,000 kronen (about $47,000) of funds belonging to the municipality of Feldsburg, and that the Government offers a reward of 1,000 kronen and 10 per cent. of the funds remaining in his possession, for his arrest. A picture of Jenner and his wife, who accompanies him, was inclosed.

FEWER CRIMES IN 1904 THAN '03, M'ADOO SAYS

Commissioner Uses Figures in Defending the Police.

ASKS REPORT FROM THE BRONX

Wants to Know Why Poolroom Raided by Headquarters Men Was Not Reported—Three-Platoon Warning.

Police Commissioner McAdoo discussed yesterday the raid made in the Bronx by Inspector Cortright's men on Thursday, and gave out a comparative table of crimes and arrests in defense of the work of the department. He has ordered a report from Inspector Albertson and Capt. Ferris as to why they had not reported the poolroom which the Headquarters staff knew all about. The Commissioner said:

"I am investigating very carefully why the Inspector and Captain of that district and precinct did not report that place. It was not reported to this office by any of the police officials in the Bronx. I have returned to them the report they sent in this morning, and have asked for a fuller one. The raid was made over their heads and without their knowledge."

The Commissioner was asked if he had anything to say about the efficiency of the three-platoon system, under which the Police Department is now working and which is said to be responsible for the alleged demoralization of the force.

"I have nothing to say on that subject," he replied.

"But Deputy Commissioner Lindsley, in the trial room this morning," was suggested, "warned accused policemen that if they did not do better police duty the three-platoon system would be taken away from them."

The Commissioner pondered for a moment and then replied:

"I have nothing to say about the three-platoon system."

Then he made public the statement of the comparative number of violent crimes committed between Aug. 1 and Sept. 1, in the years 1903 and 1904, together with statistics showing the number of arrests, convictions, &c. The statement makes a favorable showing for the present year as compared with the same period under Commissioner Greene last year. The recapitulation of the statement follows:

Violent crimes	1,479	672
Arrests	747	401
Percentage of arrests	51	60
Total number of persons arrested	864	556
Total number of persons discharged	535	200
Percentage of persons discharged	61	36
Total number of persons convicted	263	90
Percentage of convictions	30	16
Total number of cases pending	60	226
Percentage of cases pending	17	48

In explanation of the larger number of cases pending this year than last, the Commissioner said that many of the arrests in these cases were made recently, and courts have not had time to act upon them, whereas the number of cases pending last year had been reduced by cases disposed of after Sept. 1. This also applies to the number of convictions, which is much less than that of last year.

Commissioner McAdoo sent out yesterday the following general order to the force:

It having come to the knowledge of this department that members of the force are being solicited for written and oral opinions on matters appertaining to the discipline and the conduct of this establishment, and opinions on questions of public interest, your attention is called to Rule 47, last section of Paragraph C, which reads:

"Members of the police force shall not engage or take part in the public discussion of any question or matter of any kind or character upon which a diversity of opinion exists in the public mind, or which is calculated to create a dissension of sentiment in the community."

This department will be quick to punish any infractions of this rule.

Mr. McAdoo was asked why such an order was issued, and if it was because of the attacks being made on the department.

"If you are wise, you'll know why," was the Commissioner's reply.

Deputy Police Commissioner Lindsley was Trial Judge at Headquarters yesterday. One patrolman who spent the eight hours at home which he should have spent on reserve in the station house was up.

"Do you believe that reserve duty is necessary, or that it was designed by the Commissioner simply to impose a hardship upon the men?" Mr. Lindsley asked:

"I believe it is very important, Sir."

"If you don't so understand it," continued Mr. Lindsley, "and if every other member of the force doesn't so understand it, you won't have the three-platoon system. I believe that the three-platoon is a good thing, but if you men don't do first-class duty under it, you won't have it. It will either be taken away by present conditions or by the criticisms which are being directed toward the department that the men are not doing their duty."

Men Shot on Steamship Not Badly Hurt.

According to cable messages received yesterday at the local office of the Hamburg-American Line, Capt. Dugge and Frank R. Shattuck, who were shot by a Mexican passenger aboard the steamship Prinz Oskar off the Italian coast, were only slightly injured. Capt. Dugge is in command of the vessel, and Mr. Shattuck is a Philadelphia lawyer. In THE TIMES of yesterday morning there was an error in the report of the shooting. The cable advices received by the steamship company's officials here did not contain, as stated, any reference to a card game in the smoking room of the Prinz Oskar.

NAPLES, Sept. 23.—Frank R. Shattuck, the Philadelphia lawyer, who was shot on board the liner Prinz Oskar by an insane passenger, proceeded to-day to Genoa on that vessel. The bullet, which hit his left shoulder, is imbedded in the muscles of Mr. Shattuck's back.

Alliance Francaise Classes Begin Oct. 3.

The free classes in French of the New York branch of the Alliance Française will open for the season on the first Monday in October. This season it will be necessary to hold five separate classes, which are organized, as in previous years, in co-operation with Columbia and New York Universities. They will be held at College Hall, Columbia University; the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and the New York University. The Secretary of the alliance, M. André Tridon, 3 East Fourteenth Street, has charge of the registration of students.

Studying the Immigrant Problem.

Assistant Secretary Lawrence C. Murray of the Department of Commerce and Labor visited Ellis Island yesterday and made a thorough inspection of the bureau, even riding back from the island to the Barge Office on the lower deck with the immigrants, studying the manner in which they are handled in transit to and fro. On the trip over from the Barge Office on the noon boat he inspected the new ferryboat Ellis Island.

Still Deporting Gypsy Band.

Fifty-seven more of the band of gypsies which has been held at Ellis Island by the immigration authorities for several weeks will be deported on the Cunard liner Lucania this morning. This leaves fifty-one of the original 260 yet to be deported. The rest will go back as soon as the children of the party, who are now at the Long Island Hospital recovering from measles, get well.

BIG PLASTERERS' UNION NOW MOVES FOR PEACE

Seeks Conference with Employers After Ornamental Men Desert.

NEW STRIKE IN STONE YARDS

Bosses Reduced Number of Operatives on Machines—1,000 Men in New Carpenters' Body.

The Plasterers' Society, one of the strongest unions left in the Building Trades Alliance, is now making overtures for peace. It was among the first unions to be locked out, and was full of fight until the secession of the ornamental plasterers from the union this week spread dismay in its ranks.

After the ornamental men went back preparations were made at once by the rest of the society for a conference with the employers, and the Alliance is likely to lose this union in the near future. A committee from the union called at the Building Trades Club yesterday to arrange if possible a peace conference with the Employing Plasterers' Association. A member of this committee said he believed a settlement could be reached. President Thompson of the Employing Plasterers' Association said that he believed a few days would see a settlement.

More unions are expected to sue for peace. Electrical Workers' Union No. 3 is going to pieces, the employers say, and there are large secessions from Plumbers' Union No. 2. The Mosaic Workers contemplate desertion if they can get a raise of wages, and the new union of carpenters, the employers declare, is largely composed of deserters from the Brotherhood of Carpenters.

Lewis Harding, Chairman of the Press Committee of the Employers' Association, said last evening that the Greater New York Carpenters' Union, the new organization, had made a trade agreement with the Master Carpenters' Association and that all its members were at work. It also met, 1,000 strong, this week and elected permanent officers.

The original cause of the whole trouble—the strike at the Trinity Building because of the employment of non-union stonecutters by William Bradley & Son—was brought again into prominence yesterday by the extension of the stonecutters' strike to the stone yards. The walking delegates began yesterday morning by ordering strikes of the stonecutters in the yard of B. A. & G. M. Williams and George Brown & Co., in Astoria. Thirty men quit work in each yard, and other strikes were headed off by closing a number of the yards.

The strike was precipitated by the employers in the stone yards reducing their force of men at each stone-cutting machine. On Thursday by this means the employers reduced their force one-third, the reason given being that on account of the strikes cut stone was piling up much faster than it could be used.

BRICKLAYERS VOTE ON MERGER.

Nine Unions Decide To-day Whether They Will Consolidate.

For the second time a proposition to consolidate the nine bricklayers' unions in Manhattan and the Bronx will be voted on to-day.

There are about 9,000 members in the nine unions, and a vote was taken about six months ago, in conformity with a resolution passed at the last annual convention of the Bricklayers and Masons' International Union, on the question of consolidation. So few voted that the question was not regarded as decisively settled, and the National Executive Committee ordered another vote.

GIRL DROPS DEAD AT SCHOOL.

Was Working at Blackboard When Stricken with Heart Failure.

While working at the blackboard at Public School No. 8, Jersey City Heights, yesterday, Minnie Bartsch, fourteen years old, fell to the floor unconscious.

The class was dismissed and Dr. William Friele was summoned. He responded quickly, but his services were not needed. He said the child had died almost instantly from heart failure. The body was removed to the home of the child's father, Herman L. Bartsch, at Sherman and Hutton Avenues.

TESTIFIES AGAINST FATHER.

Daughter as Election Fraud Witness Doubtful Whether She Loves Him.

Herbert L. Whitney, employed in the pay department of the New York Post Office, was arraigned before Magistrate Moss, in the Jefferson Market Court, yesterday on the charge of voting illegally. The chief witness against him was his daughter, Dora.

The action was brought by Thomas F. Burns, representing the Attorney General. On the stand Dora Whitney said that her father had voted at the election last November as living at 277 Bleecker Street, Manhattan, while for the past ten years he had actually been living at 727 Monroe Street, Brooklyn.

Attorney Einstein, representing the prisoner, asked the witness if she had any love for her father, and she replied that she did not know. She gave the same answer when asked why she testified against her father. The case was adjourned until Tuesday.

WILD SCRAMBLE ON CAR.

Explosion in Motor Box Alarms Passengers—Several Injured.

There was excitement a plenty in a Second Avenue surface car last night when the motor box on the rear platform exploded. Several passengers jumped and two were slightly injured. They were Jacob Cohn, twenty-one years old, of 1,632 Second Avenue, and Morris Dreyfuss, forty-eight years old, of 1,872 Third Avenue.

The car was an open one, and when it passed Sixty-fifth Street, going north, there was a loud report, and a sheet of flame was seen under the car. Immediately there was a rush. Passengers sitting near the inside rail jumped over the rail on the downtown track. Most of them fell in the street and received bruises. Two men who were sitting on the rear seat, seeing the passengers in front jump over, followed it and [illegible]

"Black Hand Victim" Freed.

Elligrin Stravalli of 417 Third Avenue, who has been under arrest since the explosion and fire in his barber's shop on Sept. 12, which he attributed to the "Black Hand," was discharged yesterday by Magistrate Flammer in Yorkville Court in the absence of direct material evidence. It is said that the case will not be dropped, but that the Grand Jury will be asked to consider it.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

TO REVIEW a medical book in a journal of general circulation is not always wise. We usually dismiss such books with a word of acknowledgment and leave reviews and criticism of them to the technical writers of medical journals. But, as was the case with Prof. Metchnikoff's remarkable work on "The Nature of Man," the new edition of Dr. Rabagliati's book on "Air, Food, and Exercise" demands notice as a work appealing to the general intelligence. The appeal is powerful. He is a strong man and an unusual one who is not always interested in the state of his health. Dr. Rabagliati writes as a medical and physiological student of wide knowledge and large experience, but he sets down his facts and experiences in words understandable to all. He believes in moderate eating and two meals a day, in moderate and rational exercise, in the avoidance of stimulants. Most advanced physicians now believe in the same things. Sensible living will save more lives than medicine or surgery, although, as our reviewer wisely observes, the question of two meals a day or three does not signify so much as the amount of food consumed at a meal. Overeating, Dr. Rabagliati thinks, is the cause of many if not of most of the ills that flesh is heir to.

An anthology of history on so large a scale as that of "The Historians' History of the World," which we review to-day, is entirely new. This is, indeed, a notable as well as a formidable work. Twenty-five royal octavo volumes take up so much space on the shelves of a library that the custodian of a reasonably large collection is justified in hesitating to buy so huge a work. But the passages from one thousand histories of the world since Herodotus, and translated from all languages, which are contained in this volume, make it decidedly worth while. The criticism of our reviewer that the authorship of these passages is often not clearly enough indicated in the body of the work is just, but it deals with a minor defect. The passages are there, and that is the main thing.

Prof. Goldwin Smith's "My Memory of Gladstone," [illegible] only for its quotation of a suggestion by Gladstone in a letter written to the author at the time of our Civil War, that if the North thought fit to let the South go it might in time be indemnified by union with Canada. This means nothing now and probably meant very little then. Its repetition to-day irritates a few sensitive Canadians and gives a few English journalists something to write about. But the book contains many agreeable anecdotes of Gladstone, whom Prof. Smith knew well from about the time of the Crimean War until early in the seventies. It may not throw much new light on the political history of those years or reveal much if anything that was not known before of the character of Gladstone; but it is a short book and a readable one.

Even in England there are differences of opinion as to the literary quality and political purport of "Der Weltkrieg" by August Niemann, the prophecy in the form of fiction of the downfall of England's naval and military power in 1910, which we described last week. Doubtless the translation, when it is ready, will be "discovered" by the sensational newspapers and made much of. The great English Liberal organ, The Daily News of London, welcomes "The World War" as an offset to the long popular prophetic yarns about great English triumphs. "We have gradually come to believe," says The News, "that while other peoples seek only their own good, we ourselves seek only the good of other peoples. And if any one dare to say otherwise we regard him as inoculated with an unusually large dose of original sin, which must be expelled even at the cost to himself of considerable pain." The News finds the manner of the author of "Der Weltkrieg" temperate, and some of his writing fine and vigorous. It insists that his book is full of "unwelcome truths forcibly expressed." One of our readers, by the way, points out that neither the leading idea in "Der Weltkrieg" nor the expression of it is new.

It is not new for the bereaved wife of a man eminent in letters, science, or art to edit his memoirs or even to write his biography; but the practice seems to be getting more common, and biography-making may come to be regarded as a suitable occupation for widowed gentlewomen, granting that the deceased subject ever did anything worth remembering. Surely, in such cases, no one could be expected to possess a larger share of the admiration for their subject with which biographers are supposed to be equipped. To be sure some widows have written of their defunct lords and masters in terms the reverse of cordial, but such cases are rare. This Autumn and Winter we are to see the expression of wifely devotion in the form of three books which promise to be notable among the books of the season, namely, the memoirs of Sir Edward Burne-Jones by Lady Burne-Jones, the "Life and Letters of Mandell Creighton," by the Bishop's widow, and the life of the author of "John Inglesant," by Mrs. Shorthouse.

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" seems to have been one of the most popular of all Kate Douglas Wiggin's delightful books. The editor of The Biddeford (Me.) Journal expresses his belief that it is "a permanent addition to New England literature" and will be read with satisfaction by "our children's children." It seems that Mrs. Wiggin has been beset with many requests to write another Rebecca book. "The millions of Rebecca's friends know that she can be no longer 'of Sunnybrook Farm,' but they have the altogether reasonable desire of retaining her acquaintance and confidence in the new life upon the threshold of which the author left her." In a letter to the editor of the newspaper from which we have been quoting Mrs. Wiggin says: "At the present moment I am inclined to say I shall never write a second Rebecca book, but never is a long, hard word." She has received over a thousand letters on the subject and fears the smallest danger of a second not meeting the expecta-

FOOD AND HEALTH.

Dr. Rabagliati's Essay on the Predisposing Causes of Disease, Revised in a Popular Form.*

J. C. BAYLES, M. E., Ph. D.

WHAT the author modestly entitles "an essay," having its beginning in a serial contribution to The Scalpel, has expanded through rewriting and addition into a work of encyclopedic scope and almost monumental proportions. To be able to say that the results repay the labor of attaining them is a pleasure, and one which the conscientious reviewer is not always permitted to enjoy in connection with the kind of pseudo-medical literature intended for lay readers.

The original purpose of Dr. Rabagliati's work was not to treat the subjects presented from the popular point of view. Indeed, it was intended strictly for professional readers; but when compiled in book form it was eagerly read by thousands who recognized that it dealt with subjects of interest to every person of average intelligence who values health and that it presented the author's views, based on long experience, in the comprehensible language of a writer who sees no profit to himself or others in airing his erudition by obscuring his meaning in a mist of technical terminology. The first edition was quickly exhausted; a second followed almost as rapidly. Then the author, recognizing an unusual opportunity in public education, determined to rewrite and expand it into the form in which it appears in the third edition. Its qualified approval by the profession may be expected in view of the fact that it startled medical conservatism with the hypothesis that, more than the blood, the surplus of lymph in the connective tissues is the basis on which the great mass of disease is built. The author's purpose is to simplify and clarify the ideas of intelligent people on the subject of disease, in the hope and belief that having their attention directed to the chief causes of premature decay and death, they may be able by wiser habits of sane living, to considerably increase the length of efficient and healthy life and obtain some amount of relief from the calamities which, in spite of all the advances in medicine and surgery, humanity is still called upon to endure.

To avert disease is a distinctly modern concept of the physician's function. From its crude beginnings the practice of medicine has been largely devoted to the discovery and application of means of alleviating symptoms and correcting, so far as they could be reached, the causes operating to produce them. Within the past half century much of value to the human race has been accomplished in the field of preventive medicine; its future triumphs will depend upon a better knowledge of the causes of disease than its treatment has been thought to require. It should be noted, however, that effective treatment aims chiefly, if not solely, to giving nature a chance to correct morbid conditions by removing the obstacles to recovery. Of the three chief elements of modern treatment of every form of sickness—rest in bed, a diet designed to relieve the system of any tax while insuring the maximum of effective nutrition, and the giving of medicine—the last is admittedly of least consequence as promoting the restoration of health. The administration of drugs is necessarily to a great extent empirical; rest and a wisely ordered, greatly simplified and closely restricted diet would ordinarily accomplish the desired result if the medicine was omitted altogether. Among all classes of practitioners the agreement as to two of the three elements of disease treatment is perfect; that they differ widely as to the third is not surprising, since there are and can be no fixed standards of determining in advance what the action of a given drug will be. That our materia medica, and so much of medical science as is comprised in its therapeutic employment, have not together contributed much, if anything, to lengthening human life must be admitted. What has done this within the period covered by trustworthy vital statistics has always been as fully at the command of the intelligent layman as of the physician.

The opening chapters of Dr. Rabagliati's work are largely statistical, but they are of absorbing interest for the student of such matters, since they apply to figures the method of shrewd analysis and dispel many illusions based upon comparisons of totals. For example, it is a new thought, but one of first importance, that figures showing a decline in the death rate are of little comparative value unless the coincident birth rate is known. This is obvious, of course, but it is here pointed out for the first time in an intelligible way. The author discusses of many misconceptions as to the causes which have chiefly contributed to the lengthened death rate of communities which have dealt intelligently with their sanitary problems. He rides as a free lance among the traditions of the physicians and statisticians and deftly unmasks such fallacies as he encounters. At the hands of an eminent practitioner in medicine and surgery this is an effective and useful service. A layman could not render it so well, if at all.

*Air, Food, and Exercise. As Means of the Prevention [illegible]

The author's thesis is perhaps best stated in his own language in a quotation from the chapter on the causes of disease:

> The predisposing causes of disease are for the most part the relations of the body to air, to food and to exercises, with perhaps the influences of anxiety and heredity added. I shall hope to say something about the last later, and shall dismiss it for the present with the remark that as a cause of disease (though not of organization, which is greatly determined by it,) I believe its influence has been greatly exaggerated both by medical men and by the general public. And I go on to say that of the other predisposing causes of disease by far the most important is the relations of the body to food. This statement is really the main thesis of this essay. This thesis may be analyzed into the following statements: First, if human beings were to arrange properly the quantity and quality of the food which they take, and also the times at which they take it, they would suffer much less from disease and illness than they do now. Second, Even after disease has occurred or broken out, the best means to combat it and to restore the body to health is by an alteration in the diet. From which it follows, thirdly, that the best and most important means to keep a man in the health which by the supposition he has reattained is to prescribe for him a proper amount and quality of food, and suitable times of taking it for the future.
> A great Latin medical writer, it is well known, divided methods of treatment into three divisions—treatment by diet (victus,) by medicines (medicamenta,) and by surgery (manus.) And he might have added, I venture to suggest, that, with the exception of a few diseased conditions which must be treated by surgery, those diseases which cannot be treated by diet or by diet combined with exercises, which for the moment he forgot, can hardly be efficiently treated at all.

These very specific declarations of conviction should not be misunderstood. Dr. Rabagliati does not contend that the only cause of disease is found in improper food or feeding. There are many other causes, but all these together seem to him of less consequence as accounting for disease and premature death than an improper relation between the needs of the body and food. To follow his argument even in the most superficial way would be a pleasure, as the thoughtful reader is sure to find it. The following is a typical generalization:

> Moderation is the only fixed and the only unfailing rule of living; and in the case of food supply to people living in towns I attempt to define moderation as lying between twelve and twenty-four ounces of ordinary diet of wholesome quality a day, taken preferably at two meals eight hours or so apart.

A great many discreet laymen, especially business men in towns and cities, have learned from experience that this is a sane dietetic habit and practice it constantly. But Dr. Rabagliati does not leave his readers to be content with the dry husks of generalities. He presents every fact known to him in an orderly and systematic arrangement; and his chapters are extremely instructive. He has, moreover, the talent which all didactic writers do not possess, of knowing how to make facts interesting in presentation. If his style as a writer is not the best, judged by strictly literary standards, it is permeated by a subtle humor which rarely induces a smile, but still holds the attention and gives the impression of unusual cleverness in making facts interesting. On the subject of alcoholic beverages the author's views are new and striking. He says:

> I do not recommend the taking of alcoholic stimulants at all; but if they are taken. I recommend the average man to take only as much alcohol as would be represented by one small glass of whisky twice a day. More than this transcends the bounds of moderation. But if he is going to take it, say, at 5 in the afternoon, or at 11 in the forenoon, (not so suitable a time, I think,) if he is going to take it, ought he to eat with it? Well, I think not. Why should he eat at either of those times? He does not require food at 5 P. M. if he has had luncheon at from 1 to 2 o'clock; and if he does not take his first meal until 12 or 1 o'clock he still ought not to eat at 11, because whatever he eats then will certainly not be digested when he has his meal at 12 or 1, or 1:30. The same reasons which justify the advice not to eat with afternoon tea compel one, therefore, to offer the advice that if a person is going to take alcohol either at 11 A. M. or 5 or 6 P. M., he should refrain from eating at those times. It seems to be thought that if a man eats at the same time that he takes alcohol the food will prevent the alcohol from doing his stomach so much harm as if he takes it alone. I think, however, that this reasoning is fallacious, and that the habit of too frequent eating, which such practices confirm, does an immense amount of damage by keeping up continual demands for work on the part of the digestive organs. If, therefore, a man does take a little alcohol at either of those times (which I do not recommend him to do) I think he ought not on any account to eat at those times. And if his second ounce of whisky is taken at bedtime, as it so often is, I for the same reason advise him not to eat biscuits or any other food at that time. Frequent eating and frequent alcoholic drinking are two very bad things, but it is certainly more dangerous for a man or woman to do both together than it is to do one alone.

The chapter on the feeding of children is of great value and should be familiarized by all charged with responsibility for the care and nutrition of infants. It is surcharged with wise suggestions and deals with all conditions which may be considered typical. Dr. Rabagliati also has views on cancer which are interesting contributions to the already voluminous and steadily growing literature of this important subject. He believes that in proper attention to air, food and exercise will be found the best and most effective means of preventing these morbid growths so much and so justly feared. He does not, however, believe that any sure preventive of or specific cure for cancer will ever be found. This view accords with that of most intelligent students of carcinoma and epithelioma. As to sarcoma, as distinguished from carcinoma, he regards it mostly as one of the connective tissues. This view simplifies the problem very much, since, on this view, cancer of the epithelium is a special form of hypertrophy of the epithelial tissues, and sarcoma is cancer of the connective tissues. Both conditions he regards as due to overnutrition. Perhaps, on the same lines, colloid cancer might be considered a hyperthophy of the mucoid cells, and encephaloid cancer of some other form of cells. To pursue this distinction, however, would lead the lay reader unprofitably far into the realm of surgical speculation. The exciting cause in each case would seem to be an excess of materials in the blood, which is poured out in the form of a cancerous exudation. Cancer rarely occurs in children, for the reason that, as a rule, they have not had time to develop this chronic form of the evil effects of overfeeding. That cancer is practically unknown in hogs, while extremely prevalent in dogs, he explains ingeniously on the ground that hogs, which by reason of their unclean and gluttonous feeding habits should be especially predisposed to cancer, are as the rule killed young, while dogs live to what for them is the limit of mature age.

Anticipating that his dietetic views will excite more or less unintelligent ridicule, Dr. Rabagliati concludes his general summary of the causation and care of disease as follows:

> I know as well as any omniscient critic that there is no panacea against suffering. Do what we will or may, there will always be a great deal of it. That also has its lessons, with which I do not pretend to deal. But if any man can tell us what better remedy, even if there is no panacea, there is for the evils of life than moderation in all things, whether in work or rest, in food or drink, in joy or sorrow, in egoism or altruism, he will do well to declare it. And if he can offer a better approximation than mine toward the definition of what moderation is, no one will be readier than I to consider and adopt it.

The final chapter on exercise is admirable, counseling moderation and warning the reader against excessive and spasmodic recreation, which is likely to do a great deal more harm than good to one of normal sedentary habit.

Of this work, indispensable as one authority and another have declared, to an understanding both of Dante and of his time, there has been no English translation in recent years easily accessible in this country. Miss Henry's translation is therefore one that Dante students will find valuable. It has been done with care and painstaking and with an evident knowledge of Dante and his work; and though its English form is not always marked by smoothness or elegance, it is a creditable piece of work. She has given a prodigal series of notes on the text, which has many matters that need explaining; and in them has made a special effort to establish at every point the relation existing between the "De Monarchia," the "Divine Comedy," the "Convito," and the letters. Their preponderance is toward the advantage of the literary student. Thus, the sources of Dante's theories are noted wherever possible, as Miss Henry points out; his debt to Aristotle, to the Hebrew Scriptures, and to Thomas Aquinas being frequently indicated. It is interesting to follow, too, the recurrence of Dante's favorite ideas and figures of speech; as of the comparison of men to "horses astray in their brutishness, held to the road by bit and rein," and that of the wax and the seal. There are a bibliography of books on Dante and a useful index.

Dante on Monarchy.

Dante's Latin dissertation on monarchy is a part of his message to the world in which, as he avowed, he "labored for posterity in order that future generations might be enriched"; it is the political aspect of the message, as the "Vita Nuova" is the religious, the "Convito" the philosophical, and the "Divine Comedy" the summing up of all three. In the "Monarchy" Dante, having seen the failure of the Holy Roman Empire and of the Church under Gregory VII. to realize each its ambition, and perceiving also the never ceasing strife among the nations of Europe, raised his voice in the proclamation of unity among men, through a regeneration of society, and the uniting of political interests under one head, independent of the Church. The Romans, so he postulated, were the race chosen of God to receive and dispense the knowledge of law and justice, as the Jews were the race so chosen to receive and dispense the religion of God. Not in these doctrines, however, strongly savoring as they do of quaint absurdity, does the value of the treatise rest, but in the conclusions that Dante derives as to the relations of empire and Papacy and his belief in the separate existence of Church and State—the "creed of Dante's Ghibellinism" denying to the Church supreme command in temporal affairs.

Of this work, indispensable as one authority and another have declared, to an understanding both of Dante and of his time, there has been no English translation in recent years easily accessible in this country. Miss Henry's translation is therefore one that Dante students will find valuable. It has been done with care and painstaking and with an evident knowledge of Dante and his work; and though its English form is not always marked by smoothness or elegance, it is a creditable piece of work. She has given a prodigal series of notes on the text, which has many matters that need explaining; and in them has made a special effort to establish at every point the relation existing between the "De Monarchia," the "Divine Comedy," the "Convito," and the letters. Their preponderance is toward the advantage of the literary student. Thus, the sources of Dante's theories are noted wherever possible, as Miss Henry points out; his debt to Aristotle, to the Hebrew Scriptures, and to Thomas Aquinas being frequently indicated. It is interesting to follow, too, the recurrence of Dante's favorite ideas and figures of speech; as of the comparison of men to "horses astray in their brutishness, held to the road by bit and rein," and that of the wax and the seal. There are a bibliography of books on Dante and a useful index.

TALK ABOUT MUSIC.

C. L. Graves's Entertaining Book, "The Diversions of a Music Lover."

THESE "Diversions of a Music Lover," by C. L. Graves, are entirely charming and becoming to the music lover enough, when he starts in deliberately to be diverting. Where upon the humor becomes somewhat too characteristically British for this side of the ocean. Fortunately Mr. Graves seems to have had some tabling of this, and has united in a small "Part II." the contributions from Punch and other humorous sources, to keep each other company. The more sensible essays are marked by taste, feeling, and uncommonly felicity of touch. They show knowledge and a very marketable range of reading. And whether Mr. Graves speaks of some of the men and women who have been most prominent in music of recent years, of Lord Mount-Edgcumbe's delightful but now almost forgotten reminiscences of a century ago, of the Decline of the Prima Donna, or of the Voices of the Orchestra, he speaks entertainingly and instructively, even if not always, or often, originally.

Of Richard Strauss Mr. Graves has his doubts. He candidly begins his remarks about him with the warning of a French essayist, "Beware of irrevocably condemning what our grandchildren are very likely to applaud," but observes in some of the critics of the day a certain morbid anxiety to avoid the mistake which their fathers and grandfathers made over Wagner and their great grandfathers over Beethoven. Strauss's sense of beauty he finds "intermittent," and he characterizes his method as the "Sahara method"—that of presenting arid wastes diversified by an occasional green oasis of melody rendered all the more attractive by the prevailing desolation of his surroundings. To which critics mindful of their grandfathers' experiences will reply that it is precisely over the point as to what is melody and what is "desolation" that some of the greatest mistakes have been made. "Byzantinism" he considers to be the prevailing character of the last phase of German music, and recalls the strange but impressive saying of a German writer that "nothing is so repulsive as the enthusiasm of a cold heart." Mr. Graves, it appears, is the author of that envoy to Richard Strauss which he quotes as a fitting pendant to his articles, calling upon the "maddest of musical Mullahs" to > Breathe on us the blast of the blizzard,

> Pour poisonous drugs in our cup,
> Stick pins in us down to our gizzard
> And make us sit up!

He writes entertainingly about the cost of a private orchestra which some supposititious art-loving nobleman might think of setting up for himself after the classical example of the great Esterhazy family, who maintained Haydn at the head of such an organization. Mr. Higginson's Boston orchestra can scarcely be called a private band, but it is a little singular that Mr. Graves did not recall it. It is strange, too, to hear him estimating the salary of "a first-rate conductor from abroad" at $2,500 a year, and some of the other figures sound low to us. On the whole, he thinks the music-loving millionaire might treat himself to twenty-five concerts, with an orchestra of fifty, at about half what the maintenance of "a first-class racing yacht" would cost for a year. In "The Charm of the Quartet" Mr. Graves lays stress on considerations that are by no means new, but deserve repetition, as to the scope the quartet affords the composer for expressing the transcendental side of his genius in terms of sound regardless of profit or popularity. And it is agreeable to find him mentioning among the few interpreters who have most successfully entered into the spirit of the string quartet the "Kneisel Quartet of Boston."

The essayist's appreciation of Verdi is right in its point of view and sympathetic. He calls attention to the gloomy, sinister, and tragic quality of the themes that attracted him, and recalls the fact that it was the "terribilità" of Michael Angelo that made him his favorite sculptor. His crudeness, vehemence, and coarse fibre, his readiness to sacrifice beauty to truth, brought down on him the severest attacks, one of which is amusingly embalmed in Browning's lines about Verdi's "worst opera's end":

> The thing they gave at Florence—what's its name?
> While the mad housefu's plaudits near outbang
> His orchestra of saltbox, tongs, and bones.

If Browning had ever lived to hear "Falstaff," he might have been moved to recast an allusion rendered grossly unfair by the exquisite delicacy and distinction of Verdi's ripest manner. Col. Mapleson's death was the occasion for an entertaining article on the old impresarios, a class that Mr. Graves thinks is dying out to give place to syndicates. He recalls "the amazing Barbaja" as one of the greatest of the tribe—that waiter in a Naples restaurant who rose to control the operatic management of Vienna, Naples, and Milan, established a chain of opera houses and dealt in virtuosi as modern theatrical managers deal in actors, exchanging them from place to place as the exigencies of the moment warranted. Yet so ignorant was he that when a prima donna complained to him that the piano was "too high," Barbaja set the carpenters at work sawing an inch or two off the legs.

George Alexander Osborne is a name now known to the curious and the reminiscent as the composer of a once favorite piano show piece. But Mr. Graves shows him to have been a musician of attainment, an intimate of Moscheles, Chopin, de Beriot, Auber, whose reminiscences, had they ever been published, would have had a unique interest. Of the overwhelming popularity of his "Pluie de Perles," the show piece restored to, he used to tell a good story against himself:

> At a fashionable afternoon party, to which he came very late, he was invited to play, and accordingly sat down at the pianoforte and began upon the piece in question. To his surprise and indignation the whole audience burst out laughing; but he was easily appeased on learning that four other pianists had already performed the same composition.

Mr. Graves writes of Dr. Richter and his qualities as a conductor, laying special stress on his familiarity with the practical working of every instrument in the orchestra, his remarkable memory, the breadth and clarity of his readings; of Sir George Grove—it was Mr. Graves who wrote the appreciative biography of that delightful gentleman, published a year ago—of Legouvé's Reminiscences of Malibran; of "Soundless Music," and "Mental Music." His longest article is an entertaining summary of Lord Mount-Edgcumbe's book, with its acute and illuminating remarks about music, especially about Italian opera and Italian singers, of the half century ending about 1830. Part II. contains a series of jocose "Studies in Contemporary Musical Criticism," an interview with a musical cat, essays about "Critics on Strike," "Musical Reformatories," and "Music for Animals." Tastes differ in nothing so much as in humor, and when the humor concerns itself with music the chances for sympathetic appreciation are sadly lessened.

A Study of Mendelssohn.

MENDELSSOHN. By Vernon Blackburn. (Bell's Miniature Series of Musicians.) 16mo. Pp. viii.-54. New York: The Macmillan Company.

Here is a little masterpiece of biography and criticism, very small in compass, but a work of art in its proportions, in the beauty and charm of its literary style; and in its critical position marked by keen insight, suggestiveness, and sympathy, and yet a reverence for the truth that will allow no more than his just due to be paid to the subject of the work. Mr. Blackburn, as music critic of The Pall Mall Gazette, must come in constant contact with the inveterate British predilection for Mendelssohn and unswerving devotion to his music. The influence that he can exert, as he does exert it in this book, to put that English idol into his proper niche and to exhibit him in the proper perspective, is a most valuable one. Mendelssohn's fate has been curious, but not unnatural. Greatly overrated during his lifetime for reasons which Mr. Blackburn points out, the newer school of aggressive critics has gone to an extreme in decrying the value of his music; while at the same time there is a large portion of the British public—the public to which, of course, this book is chiefly addressed—who have not been shaken from the traditional British loyalty to Mendelssohn.

In fifty-odd miniature pages it is not possible to exhaust the subject either of Mendelssohn's career and personality or of the value of his music; but it is astonishing how little there is really left to say after Mr. Blackburn is done. He sums up the facts of his life in a few words that convey a living picture. It is the picture of an admired favorite of fortune, more than a little spoiled, undoubtedly, and with strata of weakness running through his character that are clearly evident now, however blinded his contemporaries were to them. The life of ease and luxury to which he was bred, for all his insatiate desire for work, was an utterly bad training for a musician of undoubted genius. A life too prosperous, too free from anxiety, requires all too little of that peering into the depths of thought by which alone the salvation of an artist is found. Absolute prosperity and an intense capacity for happiness freed him from those profundities of thought which "lie too deep for tears." Mr. Blackburn also finds a factor, or perhaps rather a symptom, of a certain defect in Mendelssohn's character in the fact that he was not solely attached to his own sentiment of creativeness.

> He was ever looking away from himself, toward the possibilities of other men, and he was too ready to listen to counsel and advice. An artist of the very first rank should never listen to advice. It is utterly fatal to his own personality, and he should avoid it, and avoid the friend that would give it.

The critic is far from insensible to the value of Mendelssohn's achievements. His thoughts were often tearfully beautiful—and at the same time his recognition of beauty in music was the recognition which an artist might give to a field of daffodils in the Spring, or to the wild roses that take the winds of June with beauty along the country hedgerows, not that of Beethoven wandering among the dark groves of stone pine or eucalyptus or of Mozart seeking El Dorado across midsummer Mediterranean seas. The quick and eager Ariel in him stimulated him to new and swift things in art and enjoyment, and burned his spirit up before his time. In his best music he shows himself peculiarly sensitive to objective sound—that, for instance, which resulted from his travels in Scotland and Italy. It is only when he becomes definitely introspective that the hand of adverse criticism becomes powerful.

WORLD HISTORY.

A Novel Anthology, Made Up from About One Thousand Histories in Many Languages.*

IN boldness of originality, business acumen, and general interest and utility it may be doubted whether the plan and purport of any of the many recent works of popular reference excel that of "The Historians' History of the World," the twenty-five generous volumes of which are now nearing completion. The aim of the editors is twofold—to gather in a single work, accessible to readers of moderate means, the most interesting and significant pages of all the great historians of the world, ancient and modern, and in so doing to present a full and compendious narrative of the history of the world from the dawn of civilization to the events of today. The work purposes to be at once an anthology of the historians and a world history.

Of world histories there have been not a few. The editor of the present volumes—Henry Smith Williams, LL. D., whose popular articles, historical and scientific, are familiar to the readers of the great magazines—does ample justice to the often slighted merits of Diodorus the Sicilian, and gives a very just appreciation of Sir Walter Raleigh's "History of the World." In strictly modern times the only world histories of note have been published in Germany. Full justice is done to the works of Schlosser, (1830,) Rottock, Weber, Ranke, and finally the huge Oncken series, which has only just been completed—none of which, however, has been translated into English. In England, the first notable world history to be completed was published toward the close of the eighteenth century under the editorship of Smollett, and was in fact the prototype of the more widely circulated works in German. In 1830 Dr. Lardner began the publication of an English world history, which, like its predecessor, was the work of a band of trained specialists, and the existence of which doubtless accounts for the fact that none of the far superior works in German have been translated. This is the last previous work of the kind in English, of a size comparable to that of Dr. Williams. There is accordingly ample scope for the present enterprise.

It is, however, as an anthology of the historians that the plan of the work evidences greatest originality and is likely to make its strongest popular appeal, and here Dr. Williams is the Columbus of an entirely new field. The number of works cited, according to Dr. Williams's able introduction, is about 1,000—many of them, of course, being represented by numerous excerpts. It is the aim to tell the history of each nation in the words of its own historians, about 1,500 passages being translated—out of almost all civilized languages, from Assyrian and Chinese to Portguese and Dutch. To avoid the prejudiced national view, however, the editor has aimed to correct the account of the native historian by that of foreigners, and likewise to correct extremist opinions by citations from the opposite extreme. In a similar manner, the stories of the most ancient authorities are supplemented and augmented by the results of modern insight and research. Thus, in classical history, Herodotus, Thucydides, Xenophon, Caesar, Livy, Tacitus, and others are supplemented by such moderns as Grote, Curtius, and Mommsen, and the whole treated, not as a collection of purple patches, but as consistent, well ordered and proportioned narrative. The result is not only to make possible to the general reader a first-hand knowledge of all the great historians, and many brilliant passages from historians of less fame, but to bring to hand many significant passages hitherto accessible only to the accomplished linguist.

Though full credit must be given to the brilliancy and popular value of the conception of the work, however, the execution seems in several particulars far from satisfactory. It is, of course, beside the question to expect it to have the same measure of uniformity and proportion as is possible in the work of a single man—for example, Weber. The admirable motto of the title page is "Prius placendum quam docendum": that which is dramatically striking and humanly interesting, both in events and in personalities, is quite properly given precedence over the dryer refinements of historical scholarship. The true criterion is the convenience and the pleasure of the intelligent general reader, and this is sacrificed, as it seems, by throwing into the background both the names and the personalities of the authors quoted. Except for minute "superior letters," as the printers say, referring to a list of names and books buried at the end of each bulky volume, there is, for the most part, nothing to indicate that page after page is not the work of a single hand; and where the quotation is introduced by name the personality and literary individuality of its author is often very insufficiently indicated.

The principle at the bottom of such management is very difficult to comprehend. Nothing is more obvious than that the general reader, and especially the modern reader, takes a vast interest in personalities; the very plan of the work is based on the fact. Personalities are both the stepping stones to history and its foundation. Memoirs are more interesting than epochs, historians than history. Except for Xenophon, who would now know of the march of the ten thousand; and except for Gibbon, who would read of the decadence of the Roman Empire? With regard to minor authors, of course, and authors quoted at the length of only a few lines, the reference system is perhaps the best. But when it is a question of Herodotus or Caesar, Froissart, Michelet, Macaulay, or Mommsen, the author's name should be displayed in the margin, and both his individuality as a historian and the bearing of the particular passage should be thrown into immediate perspective. It is the great defect of the work that this has been very imperfectly accomplished.

PRERAPHAELITES.

Mr. Dunn was a young English water colorist whose fortune it was to please Rossetti with some of his work and to be engaged by him to assist him in some of his own. He thus was admitted to the circle of intimate friends that gathered at Rossetti's house in Cheyne Walk, and had an opportunity to observe them closely. It can scarcely be said that his point of view is that of an equal in this circle, and many of his remarks about the poet-painter and his companions are almost naïve. They are more or less entertaining, however; and if Mr. Dunn does not shed any new light on the larger nature and powers of those he writes about, he at least gives many interesting glimpses of their everyday personalities.

His intercourse with Rossetti was in the period of his ripest maturity, in the later sixties, when he was nearing his fortieth year. His face conveyed to his young adherent "the existence of underlying currents of strong passion impregnated with melancholy." He possessed a peculiarly musical voice, and it was delightful to hear him read his poems to his friends. He was singularly devoid of any musical taste, however. His house was decorated everywhere with curious old and esoteric musical instruments, but they were solely decorative, and Mr. Dunn never heard a note of music in it. Rossetti once went to hear a performance of "The Messiah" at the Crystal Palace when, he said, it seemed to him that everybody got up and shouted at him as loudly as possible! At another time he saw a performance of "Fidelio." The next morning he could give Mr. Dunn no clear idea of what it was all about.

The only notion he had of it was that of a man who was taken out of prison, where he had been for a couple of days without food, and who, when a loaf of bread was given him, instead of eating it like any starving man would do, burst out into a long solo over it lasting for ten minutes—which he thought was obviously absurd!

So great can be the lack of imagination and insight in an artist toward an art other than his own. In certain of his designs and drawings Rossetti made great use of his friends as models. In his series of St. George and the Dragon and the Parable of the Vineyard, William Morris was the "strong, wicked man of the lot," dropping a big stone on the head of the Lord of the Vineyard's collector; and again he was one of the bad husbandmen, with Swinburne and Gambert, a noted picture dealer of the day. Burne-Jones was the "good boy" of Rossetti's designs, and Augustus Howell was the St. George. The last-named intimate of Rossetti, a wit and raconteur of uncommon spirit, was frequently engaged in more or less lively pranks with the poet, some of which Mr. Dunn describes—as, for instance, their thieving back and forth from one another of a wonderful piece of blue Nanking ware that Howell had picked up in Hammersmith.

Of the famous menagerie in the garden much has been said, and Mr. Dunn corroborates the worst. He does not think Rossetti had really any love for animals, but that it was simply a passion for collecting, just as he had for books, pictures, and china, which impelled him to convert his house into a sort of miniature South Kensington Museum and Zoo combined. The raccoon that continually escaped and was brought back with bills of damage by the neighbors, the armadillos that laid waste the surrounding gardens, the quarrelsome kangaroos, the shrill peacock that so enraged the neighborhood as to lead to the introduction of a clause in the leases round about prohibiting the keeping of such birds, the fallow deer, and the wicked and morose parrot, all have their places in these recollections. Over the collection of china, bric-a-brac, and old furniture in Rossetti's house Mr. Dunn is enthusiastic. He cannot quite approve of the bedroom, however, with its thick, heavy curtains shutting out light and air from an antiquated four-poster; the uninviting chairs, the massive panelled mantelpiece, filled with brass pieces, china, and bronze; the gruesome pictures, and the sumptuous Genoese velvet curtains that shrouded the deeply recessed windows and excluded such light and air as the little avenue of lime trees outside allowed to reach them. The only modern thing in it was a box of Bryant & May's matches. No wonder, thinks the visitor, that Rossetti suffered so much from insomnia!

Among the illustrations is a portrait of Rossetti, a photograph of a corner of the unwholesome bedroom, and some other glimpses of the house, and a reproduction of an interesting sketch by Rossetti of Ford Madox Brown lying on a sofa reading "Maud"—the date is Sept. 27, 1855. There is an elaborate apparatus of notes explaining, sometimes quite superfluously, personal and other allusions in the text, and no fewer than three introductions, one of which, by W. M. Russell, certifies to Mr. Dunn's intimacy with his brother.

Venice.

Dorothy Menpes, daughter of the well-known artist, has been supplied the text for a volume containing 100 full-page plates in color from the pencil of her father depicting Venice. It is announced that while she is interested in the art of Venice she also takes a young girl's view in writing about the street scene, the island city and of the home and people there.

"Petals of Love for Thee."

The Dodge Publishing Company will present this Fall a volume of poems from the pen of Edith Hall Orthwein entitled "Petals of Love for Thee." A first edition of 10,000 copies is now going through the press, the publishers say. The volume will be prettily decorated and bound.

The Cambridge History.

The fifth volume of the late Lord Acton's Cambridge History is promised for early publication by the Macmillan Company. It will deal with "Wars of Religion," and the editors think that it will be ready in January. It will have been preceded by "The Renaissance," "The United States," "The Reformation," and "The French Revolution."

Cats.

Miss Sarah E. Trueblood has just published, through the J. B. Lippincott Company, a book about cats. It deals with cats of every kind with the exception of the aristocratic cat of the bench show—fireside pussies, the kitchen cat, and the back-yard fence cat, as well as the feline of the sitting room cushion. The volume is illustrated with miniature cat portraits.

A absorbing story as well as a wonderfully suggestive invention. Several former novels have shown Mr. Wells's extraordinary power of vividly realizing the most daringly imagined conditions.

This new story is a surpassing example of these powers; and in it Mr. Wells combines them with a very telling addition of humor, pathos, and even tragedy. The book proves his powers on a high plane, gripping the reader's interest in a way which his inventiveness alone would be incapable of.

"Mr. Wells has a practical familiarity with the facts of science, and this knowledge, combined with his imaginative mind, enables him to command the attention of readers who are not usually interested in romance."—Academy (London).

THE THIRD REPUBLIC.

Albert D. Vandam's Interesting Gossip of Men and Manners in the Time of Napoleon III.*

WHEN about one-half of the book called "Men and Manners of the Third Republic" was in print its author, Albert D. Vandam, died. The publishers state that the rest of the volume was extant "in the shape of papers and contributions to periodicals" and that "these papers have been put together as nearly as possible upon the lines which the author himself seems to have intended." Mr. Vandam's reliability as a writer of serious history has been questioned. The defense made by his friends has usually been that he had made many enemies in his profession, which was that of a journalist. As to his early life Mr. Vandam writes, "The Second Empire was four years old when I came to Paris," and he did not leave France "for any length of time until the empire fell." He informs us that his "relatives who brought him up were personal friends of the Emperor, to whose father and mother they stood in similar relations." Whether Napoleon III. ever did anything for these relatives of Mr. Vandam cannot be ascertained, but he writes, "Napoleon III., like his immortal uncle, was gratitude itself." Throughout the volume the author shows the strongest imperial tendencies. This imperialism stands out in relief with his marked abhorrence of republicanism. He is overinclined to repeat all the tittle-tattle of the concierge and the gabble of the café. Pretty generally, he scores all the Republican leaders of the day, Crémieux perhaps excepted. "I was brought up," he writes, "to look upon Republicanism in general and upon French Republicanism in particular as the most transparent and most ridiculous of all shams and delusions."

Frenchmen who may read the book will not admire an author whose tendency was to always berate them. Neither had he a liking for those representing Spain or Italy, for he wrote: "I have no belief whatever in the disinterestedness of the majority of the political men of the three Latin races of Europe." The opening chapter dwells on that brutal speech of Bismarck's, when he said to Jules Favre at Ferrières, "Your improvised Chiefs of the National Defense are simply so many chevaliers du pavé," pavé to be translated somewhat freely as the gutter. Mr. Vandam writes as a comment:

Unjust though Bismarck's comment was, it practically reflected the views of the Courts of Europe with regard to the men whom we now complacently call "the founders of the Third Republic."

Gambetta the author holds in supreme contempt. To Victor Hugo, he says that the name of Gambetta was entirely unknown, until arriving in Brussels he heard some one shout "Vive la république! Vive Gambetta!" "Who's Gambetta? I do not know Gambetta," said Victor Hugo.

Vandam says he was personally acquainted with Gambetta. He used to meet him at the Café de Madrid. Gambetta was deemed to be "a blatant, self-assertive, slovenly dressed, and decidedly Jewish-looking young man." As to Thiers the author writes that he was "originally as ill-bred as Gambetta." When the representatives of the National Defense were organized they deemed Thiers very much in the way. Vandam intimates that if it could have been done Thiers would have been murdered. It was deemed wiser to bring about his temporary removal, and so he was sent on a mission to the Courts of Europe. Certainly he was to intercede for France. He did not succeed. Governments are not given to sympathetic considerations. How true it is we do not know, but the story goes that during an interview with Lord Granville in London, when his lordship was formulating a careful reply, he found Thiers sound asleep in the chair. The author intimates that the mission was accepted by Thiers because he hoped that it would act as a puff in his favor, and that even then he was looking for the Presidency. Again and again reference is made to Thiers's meanness as far as money matters are concerned. This "preliminary puff," he says, "could be organized without disbursing a brass farthing, no mean consideration to a man like Thiers." It was through his influence that the remains of Napoleon were brought from St. Helena to Paris. It is intimated that the reason for this was to advertise his forthcoming book, "Consulat et Empire."

Vandam makes an exception in regard to Crémieux, whose talents and honesty he admires, though he is a sincere republican:

The Jacobinism that was in Crémieux's blood (his father had been an ardent participator in the Reign of Terror) rarely found vent in his speech, every word of which was stamped with that old-fashioned courtesy and urbanity which reminded one more of the ancient régime than of the dispensation that immediately followed it, and his manners throughout matched his speech. He was perhaps the most eloquent pleader of the French bar of that and the immediately preceding period, and his eloquence owed nothing to either the classical or purely impassioned method; it was the eloquence of the brilliant causeur who is crammed full of interesting facts which he drops carelessly as he proceeds. * * *

That there was any friendship between Crémieux and Gambetta seems hardly possible. As to the proclamation of Gambetta's which meant a fight to the death, Vandam says:

France submitted just as she had submitted twenty-seven years before to the will of another lawyer whose reign is termed there sometimes as in France by the title of "The Reign of Terror." Victor Hugo had it that "poverty is a crucible into which fate flings a man each time society stands in need of a goddess hero or a diabolical criminal." A revolution in a Latin nation seems to be the caldron into which the three witches of ambitious sedition, alias, the goddesses respectively of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity, fling a lawyer each time that nation requires a sublime patriot for her salvation. In nine cases out of ten the result is not a sublime patriot, but a taciturn or loquacious and arrant self-seeker. In the one case, from the hissing, seething compound of human passions there emerges a Benito Juarez, in the other a Maximilian Robespierre or a Leon Gambetta.

Comment on this as far as Gambetta is concerned is useless. According to Vandam, Gambetta was a coward, from "the top of his head to the soles of his feet, in spite of his much-vaunted balloon journey." Thiers he also accuses of cowardice. A description is presented of the French Army at the time when Gambetta determined to renew the fight:

The spirit of indiscipline was rife; defeat upon defeat had made the men skeptical with regard to the capacity of their leader; the only one not absolutely discredited was Vinoy, for he, at any rate, had saved some of his troops at Sedan by his timely retreat toward the Belgian frontier at the risk of being impounded, which fate he averted by an unopposed side movement. * * * The improvised troops that fought within the next few months under Chanzy, Faidherbe, Aurelle de Paladine, and Martin des Pallières had no such want of confidence in their leaders.

Vandam thinks that these officers ought to have declined the contest. As to the volunteers, they are ridiculed. The acceptance of Garibaldi's aid is declared to have been a grave mistake. Vandam writes:

I admired as much as any one the famous condottiere; his name, however, was not a fetich to me, as it was, and still is, to many Englishmen; but even the latter will not seriously maintain that the name had the slightest significance in connection with military discipline. Moreover, to Frenchmen, and especially to conservative Frenchmen, who are invariably sincere Catholics besides, it was positively distasteful.

Recalling the Dreyfus persecution, with its Spanish Inquisition resemblances, the author writes:

While Gambetta and Freycinet were browbeating and hectoring Generals, Crémieux was disorganizing the French judiciary, and, odd to relate, restoring the seeds of anti-Semitism, which Napoleon III. had with much trouble prevented from sprouting luxuriantly during nearly the whole of his reign. In fact, anti-Semitism, or, for the matter of that, religious intolerance, is by no means a new thing in the nineteenth century France. Jew-baiting and Jew hatred under a republican régime owed their revival to two Jews—Gambetta was as distinctly a Jew as Crémieux—both professed republicans.

Not to appreciate Balzac is to be wanting in acquaintance with the romantic history of the last century, but why he should be made as an exemplar of modern politics is barely understandable. Jules Simon is called the "Père Goriot" of the Third Republic. All the petty scandals of the time were believed in by the author, and he repeats certain stories concerning Jules Simon's family which bring about an allusion to him as Balzac's "accommodating hero."

The author declares that Guizot was compelled to follow precedents, and that Thiers invariably used spies, so as to be on the watch for the plottings of his political foes. Vandam insists that the spy mania raged with exceeding violence during the period of the Third Republic, and that the Parisian journals were always crying words of caution. In his summary on spies Vandam writes:

France continues to suffer from the spy mania. * * * When a nation has been afflicted with acute spy mania for a number of years she resorts instinctively to the supposed remedy of counter-espionage. Guizot, whose writings even more self-weighed than his mere verbal utterances, has plainly told us that the road between the spy and the agent provocateur is short and easy of descent. How much shorter and easier of descent that road is between the counter-spy and the agent provocateur need not be pointed out after the Esterhazy trial. It is the most lurid of all the side lights of the revanche idea, so lurid, in fact, as to defy extinguishing except at the risk of morally swamping military France.

The literary celebrities of France of the middle of the last century particularly occupy the attention of the author. The Anglo-Saxon does not admit that the maker of verse has the statesman's gifts. Common, hard sense is rarely appreciated in florid verbiage. In France it has been different. Of all of them it is Lamartine who showed a certain ability. Victor Hugo was an impossible man. From Chateaubriand to the poets of lesser degree, when in politics, they have shown themselves to be of the smallest calibre.

M. François Coppée has had, and deservedly, many admirers in the United States, carried away, as they have been, by his fine verse writing. But his entrance into politics and his attitude as a demagogue have not added to his reputation, but diminished it. Vandam wrote concerning Coppée: "He has taken to agitating outside the Chambers, and making foolish speeches in the guise of quasi-patriotic harangues. What is worse, he is writing political pamphlets." So most of us will agree with Vandam when he says: "The poet should not be a legislator; still less should he be a firebrand in the cause of persecution."

Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler.

The title of the new novel by Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler, which D. Appleton & Co. will publish early in October, is "Kate of Kate Hall." It is the result of literary collaboration between wife and husband, the latter being Mr. Felkin, to whom Miss Fowler was married about a year ago. Miss Fowler's last book was "Place and Power." It may be recalled that she achieved her first success about six years ago in this country with "Concerning Isabel Carnaby," a book of which 50,000 copies were sold. Then came novels of almost equal success, "A Double Thread" and "The Farringtons," and finally "Place and Power." "Kate of Kate Hall" is an English story, and readers can hardly fail to discover in it the constructive skill and dramatic dialogue which have characterized Miss Fowler's earlier efforts.

LAMB'S LETTERS.

A Reprint of the Late Canon Ainger's Edition with Some New Matter.*

THIS new edition of Canon Ainger's collection of Lamb's letters is welcome because of the important additions it contains. The interesting series of letters to Robert Lloyd and his father, and several others published in the earlier edition de luxe, are included here in this reissue in the Eversley Series; and there are besides about twenty new ones addressed to John Rickman of the House of Commons, now printed for the first time. Lovers of Lamb will rejoice at every such addition to their possession of his writings; yet, while a complete collection of his letters, or of any other letter writer's, is unattainable, as Canon Ainger says, they will not quarrel with him for refusing to include three-line invitations to supper or reminders of some outstanding engagement. So long as he has taken care to print any scrap of a note containing a characteristic flash of humor or felicity of expression, or supplying any link in the chain of incidents that made up his own life or Mary Lamb's, they should thank him.

The collection is a precious and most luminous contribution to our understanding of Lamb's nature and the sufferings and joys of his life, of his humor, tenderness, unceasing loyalty, of his wisdom and keenness in literary and other criticism. In a word, they are an essential part of the legacy left by one of the most delightful men and writers who ever lived. Smiles and tears are mingled in them, for he imparts to his correspondents freely the grief and anxiety that the burden of his sister's ailment gave him; but it is all noble and strong, and there is none of the bewailing of the weak man. No one can read the letters to Coleridge, for instance, informing him of the terrible tragedy of his mother's death at the hand of his sister without not only profound admiration, but a still deeper and, as it were, personal affection for the man. The letters to Rickman, which are the new edition's new contribution to the pleasure of Lamb's admirers, begin in September, 1801. They are among the most characteristic of all, for they are written in the vein of intimacy that brought out Lamb's best side as a letter writer. They are, furthermore, chiefly devoted to topics of a cheerful character and are full of delightful fooling of a more or less serious kind. He confides to him some of his own trials and troubles in his short but interesting experience in daily journalism. Thus of writing for The Morning Chronicle he says:

I soon found that it was a different thing

while pay was concerned, a great deal for the poor Albion. More than three-fourths of what I did was superciliously rejected; whereas in the old Albion the seal of my well-known handwriting was enough to drive any nonsense current. I believe I shall give up this way of writing and earn honest, scramble on as well as I can for a year and make a Book, for why should every creature make books but I?

He became connected with The Post as dramatic critic, however, as he intimates to Rickman:

If you have read The Post you may have seen a dissertation on Cooke's "Richard III.," which is the best thing I have done. It was in last Monday; stray Jokes I will not mark, hoping that you will always take the good ones to be mine and the bad ones to be done by John A. Nokes, &c.

But dramatic criticism, especially for a daily paper, was not to his taste, nor was editorial supervision. To criticism by Rickman, apparently, on his article he responds as follows:

You may suspect as much as you please (suspicion ever haunts the guilty mind) that I did not do that thing about Richard, but I tell you I did, and I also made the Lord Mayor's bed, which you are welcome to rumple as much as you please. I plead guilty to certain "felicities of phrase." * * * But what the devil's all this coil for about delightful artifices and elastic minds? And how should a man at Santry Bay know anything about good English? The fact is that it was but an unfinished affair at first, and by the intelligence of the editor it was made more chaotic still. As it stands it is more than half introduction; half of which was to be note. But it is most probably the last theatrical morceau I shall do, for they want 'em done the same night, and I tried it once and found myself non compos. I can't do a thing against time. If I use "do" and "did" to excess 'tis because I know 'em to be good English, that you can't deny. My editor uniformly rejects all that I do considerable in length. I shall only do paragraphs, with now and then a slight poem, such as "Dick Strype," if you read it, which was but a long epigram. So I beg you not to read it with much expectation, for my poor paragraphs do only get in when there are none of anybody's else. Most of them are rejected; all, almost, that are personal, where my forte lies.

It is indeed difficult to imagine Lamb's "doing" dramatic criticism "the same night," and submitting to the editorial blue pencil—with as bad grace as other edited contributors before and since. Matters got worse. He "gradually got out of favor"; the editor told him twice that he must "take more pains" about his paragraphs, for "he has not been able to draw above one in five from what I have sent him."

Gallatin's "Aubrey Beardsley."

The remaining copies of Mr. Gallatin's "Aubrey Beardsley's Drawings" have been transferred to Mr. Ernest Dressel North, 18 East Twentieth Street, New York City. An addenda, consisting of a record of additional drawings and essays written on the artist's genius, will accompany these copies. Mr. Gallatin writes of Beardsley as a man of letters in the October Critic.

Atoms of Empire.

Early in October the Macmillan Company will publish "Atoms of Empire," a new book by C. J. Cutcliffe Hyne, creator of Captain Kettle and the author of "Thompson's Progress."

BOSTON NOTES.

Harris Burland's "Princess Thora"—Bliss Carman's Volume of Essays —Some Juveniles.

CONJECTURES as to the event if a fully equipped modern army should encounter the forces by which Norman William conquered and kept England generally leave the Normans and their castles, their armor and their weapons, a battered heap of indiscriminate ruin, with the firearms and modern explosives almost as good as new, but very different is the prospect offered by Mr. Harris Burland in his "The Princess Thora," to be published this month. He gives the two a fair field, sending the Normans to found a kingdom on an island in the Polar Sea, and dispatching a small heavily armed English fleet thither eight centuries later. Such little difficulties of temperature, light, food, and clothing as might suggest themselves to the most credulous reader are met by the invention of active volcanic forces, warming the surface of the earth and furnishing natural gas for illumination; and as for clothes, an amiable spider provides silk for the rich, and the poor make remarkable garments of the skins of birds and animals. The love story of the book is framed in this piece of extravagance, and it reserves a surprise to the very end. Those who love coincidences will be interested in noting that the late Henry Merriman's last book and "The Princess Thora," unlike as they are, yet present the chief character as facing exactly similar situations, and those who read Mr. T. Harrison Milner's "Modern Arms and a Feudal Throne" will find his suboceanic contest between Elizabethans and moderns fairly surpassed in wildness.

Mr. Harris Burland is an English author, whose best-known work is "Dacobra," but who at this moment has two serial stories running in English papers. He is the son of an English officer and was intended for the army, but a severe fit of illness, following immediately upon his first examination for Sandhurst, put an end to that ambition, and it was decided that he should enter the Church and take the living belonging to his family. While at Exeter College, Oxford, he won the Newdegate Prize for verse and edited The Isis. He took his degree in 1895, but instead of taking orders he went on the stage for a year, and within the last two years began to write fiction.

If his publishers, Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., had deliberately planned the contrast between this book and its companion, Anne Warner's "Susan Clegg and Her Friend, Mrs. Lathrop," it could hardly have been sharper. Susan has appeared four times in The Century, and her qualnt and utterly obtuse selfishness and love of gossip are familiar, but to the four magazine papers, carefully revised and rewritten, is now added "The Minister's Vacation," a droll little farce, making the most of the difficulties offered by the vacation of a poor man with thirteen children, nearly every one endowed with the reputation of some wondrously irritating trait.

Mrs. Ellen Olney Kirk's "The Apology of Aylilffe" presents her favorite apposition of types, transparent candor, and subtlety that may turn to dishonesty or may be used only in kindliness as events may will. The heroine has three lovers, but not many chances to make love do they have among them, with four aunts, two large Angoras, and a Skye terrier to keep guard, occasionally relieved by a cockatoo. The story is almost pure comedy, although the heroine has an uncomfortable moment now and then, and it describes gardens to be envied even by the possessors of the Italian paradises pictured by Mrs. Edith Wharton.

First of several books to come from Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. to-morrow is Miss Repplier's "Compromises," all in gray and gold. Nearly all the papers in the volume have been printed in magazines, but their variety of subject is such that they gain by being brought into one volume. "Our Belief in Books," "Marriage in Fiction," "The Tourist," "The Spinster," "The Gayety of Life," and "The Luxury of Conversation" are their titles. The personal element appears only in one paper, "Allegra," and one can hardly regard unique and wretched Allegra as real.

"The Flower Princess," Miss Abby Farwell Brown's book, is illustrated by three artists—Miss "P. S. H.," Miss Margaret Ely Webb, and Miss Ethel Brown—for its four little fantasies, although it has only six pictures. The end papers furnish part of the illustration for "The Mermaid's Child" and "The Ten Blowers," two of the stories. The Rev. Washington Gladden's volume of sermons, "Where Does the Sky Begin"; Mr. William Bellamy's "Third Century of Charades," and Mr. Everett T. Tomlinson's "Rider of the Black Horse" also come to-morrow, and with them a rather important schoolbook, "The Riverside Graded Song Book," a collection including settings of many real poems instead of the ordinary array of effective tunes fitted with words of which the best are mediocre and the worst an insult to syntax and prosody.

The ninth Dapper Book, "Five Little Foxes and Their Friends," will not appear [illegible]

vanced orders. The author has still other stories planned.

Mr. Bliss Carman's "The Friendship of Art" should have appeared in August, but has been delayed, and will not come until October. It is to have a photogravure portrait of the author, to be bound in the same style as "The Kinship of Nature," and it is whimsically dedicated to "Moonshine," a Summer home at which he has found solace and refreshment. In accounting for this bit of whimsicality he inquires why it may not be believed that every abode is pervaded by its distinct and individual tutelary presence, as the Greeks believed was the case with every shrine, and, truly, the picture which he makes of Moonshine as a home with an atmosphere and distinction all its own; the music and song and merrymaking which he describes as having filled it may well have given it a soul. The volume contains twenty-five little essays, a few of which have appeared in The Literary World. Two of them, one on "Personal Rhythm," the other "On Tradition," are sure to provoke lively discussion, but the chief trait of all is the avoidance of the common phrase, making one always confidently expectant of the happy little shock on which one could safely rely in Arthur Sullivan's musical phrases and sentences.

So energetic are the critics in lamenting that nobody writes a second "Robinson Crusoe" or even a second "Alice in Wonderland," that the appearance of authors capable of making goodness attractive passes almost unnoticed, and yet more than one of the heroes and heroines presented to girls and boys for approval has delightful adventures so entirely dependent upon an act of virtue that the dullest child sees the connection. For instance, in Mr. Alvah Milton Kerr's "Two Young Inventors" the hero saves the life of a poor old dog, and within a few days finds his crabbed old uncle transformed into a bucolic ministering angel, and himself set free from farm tasks, to enter upon a career of big fish catching, the capture of a diamond thief and a bank-robber, and the ownership of a sailing wagon and a flying boat. Mr. Stratemeyer, however, is conservative, and gives a home and a mother to "Larry the Wanderer," but not until he has indulged him with many hair-breadth escapes from perils created by his own foolishness, and the extraordinary simplicity of a grown-up comrade. Mr. Stratemeyer's third book this season, "On the Trail of Pontiac," touches only the beginning of the conspiracy, leaving the chief events for next year's book, "The Fort in the Wilderness." The characters are the Morris boys and Barringford the woodsman, and White Buffalo, once called the king of the trail, all personages of "In the Fall of Montreal." This is to say that the bcok is really a link in a chain, and so is Miss Amanda M. Douglas's "Helen Grant's Friends." The first volume, it will be remembered, was published at about the same time as "Becky," Mrs. Wiggin's book, and resembled it in general scheme, but this book shows the young heroine at an uncertain moment when she hesitates between going to school for her own pleasure and permitting her newly found father to take her to Europe to educate her as his assistant. The author sympathizes with the heroine's willfulness, and places her in the too-clever-to-be-understood attitude in which girls delight. These books are on Messrs. Lee & Shepard's list.

One of the valuable works in preparation by Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. is Mr. T. B. Edgington's "The Monroe Doctrine," a comprehensive history. It begins with a sketch of Mme. de Krudner and an exposition of the manner in which her influence on the Czar led to the formation of the Holy Alliance. British politics and the attitude of Great Britain toward the Alliance and Canning's influence are set forth, and also the vexed condition of the South American republics and the political problems offered by this hemisphere. A series of quotations from statesmen and State documents shows the drift of American opinion, and a final chapter on the new State of Panama exhibits its latest manifestation. The author, a member of the Memphis bar, has studied the subject for some years, and has endeavored to treat it exhaustively. STEPHENSON BROWNE.

Seton's New Story.

Another story of intimate animal life from the pen of Ernest Thompson Seton and illustrated by him is announced by Charles Scribner's Sons for publication about the first of next month. It is entitled "Monarch, the Big Bear of Tallac." In it the author is said to return to his earlier method pursued in "Wild Animals I Have Known." He has made eight full page wash drawings and nearly 100 characteristic marginal sketches for the book, which contains the longest animal story that the author has ever written. It will appear in small quarto form, profusely decorated, and printed in two colors.

An Engineer's Autobiography.

Tom Keenan, who has been driving engines on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western for nearly half a century, has written his autobiography, which, with the title, "Tom Keenan, Locomotive Engineer," is being issued by the Revells. Mr. Keenan has also assisted in building up the Young Men's Christian Association among railroad men. His book, passed through the editorship of Newell Dunn, has many little variations from the ordinary [illegible]

EDINBURGH.

A Book About the Beautiful Scotch City by Oliphant Smeaton.*

EDINBURGH is probably the most picturesque city in the world. As a term of endearment it has been called "Auld Reekie," but despite the smoke of its many chimneys you may see through the haze the most glorious landscape. Climb up to "King Arthur's chair" and you will ever remember "the vivid emerald of the embossing woods amid which the city seems to nestle, contrasting with the green of the grassy hills encircling it." Mr. Oliphant Smeaton thus describes Edinburgh as seen from an eminence:

In the mass of stone and lime lying at our feet the predominating features seem to be the chimney-stalks and steeples. For those, however, who, after reaping the harvest of a quiet eye in the scene further afield, reduce the radius of vision from "far" to "near," a little effort will be required to pick out such outstanding objects as the Castle, perched on its rock like an eagle on its eyrie; the crown-shaped campanile of St. Giles; the dome of the University, surmounted by its bronze figure of "Youth," holding aloft the torch of knowledge; the Calton Hill crowned with Nelson's monument, (unfinished,) intended to represent the Parthenon of Athens, and immediately below it the Royal High School, with its hexastyle Doric portico, resembling the Attican Temple of Theseus; the Royal Infirmary; the new Observatory on Beckford Hill, &c. The prospect is one almost marvellous in the world.

Closely associated with Edinburgh is the history of Scotland. As far as the record shows, some time in A. D. 629 Edwin of Deira gained the throne of Northumbria. His main object was to overawe the Britons. He occupied a stone fortress and reconstructed it, and the village attached to it he named Edwinsburgh. Hence the more modern Edinburgh. By the Gaelic population it was called Dun-Edin. Sometimes the modern poets have called it, "Edina." Authentic history begins during the reign of Malcom II., (1005-1034.) When Malcom III. was King his wife was the beautiful and pious Margaret, sister of Edgar the Atheling and niece of Edward the Confessor. Margaret, who has been canonized by the Roman Church, has had her memory preserved in connection with the castle by her having built a chapel. The history of the castle is replete with captures and recaptures. Edward III. held the castle, when by a clever ruse Douglas seized it. The author calls Edinburgh the distinctive city of the Stuarts. It was adopted by them as the capital of the kingdom, where the seat of justice was located, and where the King himself had his residence. In 1383 the Earl of Carrick gave the burgesses permission to build houses within the castle walls. It was toward the end of the reign of James I. that architecture showed some progress in Edinburgh. He built and endowed a monastery, Grayfriars, on the south side of the Grassmarket. Fires seem to have been prevalent then, for in the statute books there are to be read certain instructions concerning the providing of ledders, "that they be keeped in a reddie place." In addition to the "leidders," orders were issued to have "sayes" (saws) and "clieks of iron to drawn downe timber and roofs that are fired."

In their battles with the English the superiority of the English archers was marked. James I. ordered that the greensward at the foot of Castle Rock be used for archery practice. The enactment in Parliament read, "Na man playe at the fute-bas (football) under paine of fifety schillings, But that all men busk them to be archers-foa they be twelfe zeir of alge."

To James II. is due the erection of Holyrood Palace. When James III. was King, Edinburgh consisted of one long street, "extending from the Castle to the Netherbow Port, and thence through the ecclesiastical burgh of the Canongate to Holyrood Abbey and Palace."

James having had the fact brought under his notice that there were no fixed places set apart for holding the different markets, and that the lack of such often gave rise to strife among the citizens, accordingly ordained by letters patent that the markets for the sale of the various commodities should be held in the following places of the burgh, viz., the "hay, straw, and horse meat markets" in the Cowgate from Foresters' Wynd down to Peebles' Wynd; the "fish market" from Friar Wynd to the Nether Bow, the salt market "in Niddry's Wynd," the "hatmakers and skinners" opposite to them, on the south side of the street; the "shoe market" from Foresters' Wynd westward.

The business of a fairly large town in the first decade of the fifteenth century may be learned with tolerable accuracy from these statutes. There were markets for the sale of meat, poultry, cattle, meal and corn, and cloth and lawn. Butter, cheese, and wool had to be weighed in certain specified places. The cutlers and smiths were located about St. Mary's Wynd, and the saddlers at the Grayfriars. It was the habit in those days for the clerks to be always shouting their wares and vaunting the quality of their goods, and so a marketplace of old was a noisy place. Labor unions are of an old period, and they went under the name of guilds. A well-known one was the Society of Hammerers, made up of blacksmiths, "lorimers," (fashioners of bits and spurs,) saddlers, cutlers, or armormakers.

"There is nothing new under the sun," and if there were no beef trusts in Scotland at the time, there were "Fleschouris," or butchers, who passed laws expelling "laddies and boys." With the coming of James IV. there were many changes in Edinburgh. In 1535 the town had become a busy one, and the style of the houses was improved. The craftsmen were held in high repute. An Edinburgh armorer was thought to have been the most skilful in all Europe. The High Street was paved for the first time, as formerly it had been a quagmire. In August, 1561, Mary Queen of Scots made her state entry into Edinburgh.

She was met by a grand procession, headed by fifty of the goodliest youths of the city disguised as blackamoors, with crape vizors over their faces and wearing gilded fetters as a token that they were her slaves forever. Sixteen of the most honorable citizens, clad in crimson satin doublets and long velvet robes, bore a canopy of fine purple velvet lined with red taffetas, under which the Queen rode. Passing through the Grassmarket, they ascended the West Bow, and thence by Castle Hill into the fortress. Here she was entertained by the Scotch nobility in the old banqueting hall at a splendid collation, in which French confections played no small part. * * * The city fountain "played" wine in place of its natural fluid, and the citizens crowded to drink the health of their beautiful Queen from glass goblets, which they immediately broke that the vessel might not be profaned by any meaner toast.

Unfortunate Queen! We know that news traveled slowly in those days, so it was more than a month before her son heard of his mother's beheadal. The story goes that James VI. "exhibited" very great displeasure and grief, so that he went to bed that night without supper." During the reign of the two Charleses and the interegnum of Cromwell there was not much change in Edinburgh. A month before Oliver Cromwell died the Council of Edinburgh spoke of him as "his Highness Lord Protector, Oliver Cromwell, under whom we have enjoyed great peace and felicity." The next month he was styled "that notorious tyrant and traitor, Oliver," and his effigy was burned on Castle Hill.

It is curious to learn that the first efforts to make the Isthmus of Panama a direct connection between the East and the West was due to Scotland, and more particularly to Edinburgh. Mr. Smeaton writes:

The Scottish merchants had always desired to share the East India trade, but were debarred by the jealousy of the English merchants. Presently the proposal was mooted that Scotland should strike out a field of foreign trade for herself, Africa and the West Indies being selected as the sphere of operations. Upward of £200,000 was subscribed as the capital of the new company, scarcely a householder in Edinburgh or in Scotland failing to take shares. The expedition to colonize and found a settlement at the Bay of Darien, on the Isthmus of Panama, was fitted out and dispatched from Leith in July, 1698, amid general rejoicings. A stately Darien House and large office and storehouse for the company's merchandise was erected, and all imagined they were going to become rich beyond the dreams of avarice. The expedition, under the command of William Paterson, founder of the Bank of England, in whose brain the scheme had originated, was mismanaged from the first.

The reasons for the failure were not alone due to inherent difficulties, but the King of England seems to have played into the hands of the King of Spain, and even a permit was given his Spanish Majesty to harass the Darien expedition. In the end the settlement of Darien had to be abandoned, and the vessels of the company, while lying in the Thames, were seized as pirates. All Scotland resented this act, and mob violence was threatening in Edinburgh, but the days of the city as an independent capital were near their close. In 1707 came the final session of the Scots Parliament, and Union followed.

Some of the peculiarities of old Edinburgh are dwelt on in the book. When the city became fairly populous houses were built outside of the old limits and on high ground. There were towering tenements, resembling our modern skyscrapers, of fourteen, and even fifteen, stories. Water became difficult to obtain or to get rid of. "All refuse and household slops had either to be carried down the stairs or thrown out of the windows. After 9 o'clock there was danger at every step in walking the streets of Edinburgh." The warning cry was "Gardyloo," a corruption of the French "Gare a l'eau," to be translated "watch out for the water." In his "Humphrey Clinker" Smollett refers to this. There was then overcrowding in certain parts of the city houses. "The families of the Scotch metropolis were thus literally packed together like herrings in a barrel, one above the other." Slender household accommodation brought about the frequenting of taverns by the male members of a family.

Following the literary advance of Edinburgh, the author begins:

Walter Scott was born in a house at the head of College Wynd, one of the offshoots from the Cowgate, and in the same year the first edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica was issued. In 1773 Dr. Samuel Johnson paid his visit to Edinburgh, and in 1779 a series of anti-Popish riots occurred which were for a time somewhat alarming. In 1785 the construction of the South Bridge to span the ravine of the Cowgate and to carry the great southern road toward Newington was begun, and completed in five years; in 1786 Robert Burns, Scotland's greatest poet, came to Edinburgh, and at the house in the Sciennes inhabited by Prof. Adam Ferguson, (of the chair of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh,) met Walter Scott, then a boy of sixteen. In the following year Burns again visited Edinburgh and brought out through Creech, the great Edinburgh publisher of the period, whose premises were in the Luckenbooths, the second edition of his poems. Creech's shop in the Luckenbooths was then the resort of all the literati of the city. * * * The establishment of The Edinburgh Review in 1802 by Scott's friend Jeffrey and the band of coadjutors that gathered around him, afforded Scott an opening for testing his powers in writing for the periodical press. In 1803 his "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border" whetted the public appetite for that type of verse in which he was to achieve success so unprecedented. The inimitable series of the Waverley Novels began with "Waverley" in 1814 and ended with "Castle Dangerous" in 1831. Though several of these were written in his noble Border home at Abbotsford, the greater part of them were penned in his "own romantic town," either in his residence, 39 Castle Street, or in sundry hired apartments in various parts of the city—St. David Street, Walker Street, and Shandwick Place. Scott was a true son of "Dunedin," and to the last she inspired his genius.

ABOUT AUTHORS.

Henry Harland, author of "My Friend Prospero," has just finished a new novel upon which he has been working for some months past. It deals with American life, the material for which was gathered during the author's recent sojourn in Connecticut. The story is said to be based on a historical episode in Mr. Harland's own family.

Winfield S. Lukins has made five drawings for the two stories by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell which are published this week in a volume bearing the imprint of the J. B. Lippincott Company. The book is called "New Samaria." This is the title of the first story, which is a study of modern manners and life; the second is a love idyl, which, in the opinion of the author, includes some of the best work he has yet done.

Everett T. Tomlinson's new story "The Rider of the Black Horse," tells of the adventures of a Revolutionary courier. Last Decoration Day at Cape May City, N. J., there was unveiled a monument to John Grace, one of Washington's couriers, whose deeds inspired the present book. Dr. Tomlinson was invited to be present and to speak on this occasion, but was unable to do so.

Editions of "Old Gorgon Graham," the new "Letters from a Self-made Merchant to his Son," by George Horace Lorimer, have been issued not only in Great Britain, but also in Japan, Canada, Australia, Germany, France, India, and South Africa.

Kate Douglas Wiggin gave an Author's Reading at the Church at Buxton Lower Corner, Maine, last Thursday, when she read from her own books, including "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." Mrs. Wiggin's latest book, "The Affair at the Inn," published last week, has already gone into its fourth edition.

Edgar Stanton Maclay has furnished the American Tract Society with "Life and Adventures of Jack Philip, Rear Admiral U. S. N." An introduction for the book has been written by Capt. Alfred Thayer Mahan. This is the work which first appeared last year as a memorial volume, and its new publishers have taken it over in order to give a broader publicity to this life of a "Christian sailor and gentleman."

The main topics in ex-President Cleveland's forthcoming book, which The Century Company is to publish this Fall, are the Venezuela boundary question, the Chicago riots, the bond issue, and the independence of the Executive. In other words, it will form an exposition and defense of the principal National and international events which punctuated the President's second term—all written from the point of view of the Executive.

The second edition of "Jessica Letters," which is announced this week by the Putnams, will bear upon the title page the names of the hitherto anonymous authors, Paul Elmer More and Mrs. Lundy Howard Harris. Mr. More was formerly literary editor of The Independent, and has just published a volume of papers called "Shelburne Essays." Mrs. Harris is one of the best known literary women of the South and her articles have appeared in several of the best Northern magazines. She formed the interesting acquaintance with Mr. Harris which resulted in the "Letters" while contributing articles to The Independent.

Rudyard Kipling's new book, "Traffics and Discoveries," will be published Oct. 4 with the imprint of Doubleday, Page & Co. This is the first volume of collected stories to appear from his pen since the publication of "The Day's Work." There will be one long story, hitherto unpublished in America, in the volume, "The Army of a Dream," which is said to embody a remarkable study of what the British army may become under its present administration. There will also be the curious symbolic story "They" which appeared last month in an American magazine, together with "Wireless," "Mrs. Bathurst," "Their Lawful Occasions," "The Bonds of Discipline," "The Captive," "The Sahib's War," and "Below the Mill Dam."

Mary Caroline Crawford, author of "The Romance of Old New England Rooftrees," has been preparing a new book which L. C. Page & Co. of Boston will publish. It will have many full-page illustrations taken from photographs of various colleges, types of college girls, and representative college scenes. As may be gathered from the nature of the pictures, the volume will be called "The College Girl of America." Miss Crawford is peculiarly fitted to write the book; she is a graduate of Radcliffe, and, in college and out, has mingled much with college society, Faculties, and clubs, and has been identified with university movements which have had their origin with female students and graduates.

Booker T. Washington in Russian.

An important experiment is to be made by a professor connected with Prince Khilkoff's Russian Ministry of Public Works and Railways. It is to translate Booker T. Washington's book "Up From Slavery" into Russian for the benefit of the Russian people, country nobles as well as ex-serfs. The former have been often compared with Southern gentlemen who were made poor by the emancipation proclamation, and the present state of the Russian mujik is considered by sociologists to be very little different from that of the American negro.

MADAGASCAR.

"THIRTY YEARS IN MADAGASCAR. By the Rev. T. T. Matthews of the London Missionary Society. With sixty-two illustrations. Cloth. Pp. 384. New York: A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.75.

The Rev. T. T. Matthews of the London Missionary Society in his work, "Thirty Years in Madagascar," tells of his many and varied experiences. Madagascar is the third largest island in the world, "being 1,000 miles long by 375 at its widest part, with an average breadth of 250 miles." It was the author's misfortune to exercise his religious functions when the island changed hands and became to all intents and purposes a French colony. It cannot be said that he regards the islanders with much respect. He thinks that too much has been expected. The very extension of Christianity has, he tells us, been "wide" but has been wanting in "depth." To transmogrify a heathen into a fair Christian will take more than one generation.

In the first quarter of the last century there was a King of the island whose name was Radima. The English missionaries made a translation of the New Testament, and parts of it were read for the special delectation of the King. His Majesty seemed to take no interest in the readings until the Crucifixion was reached. Then he asked, "Crucifixion, what is that?"

It was explained to him. "Ah!" he said, "that's a capital mode of punishment. I will have all my criminals crucified for the future. Call the head carpenter." He was called and ordered to prepare a number of crosses.

The story goes on to say that many were made to suffer on the cross. Radima, from his peculiarities, has been called "Peter the Great of Madagascar." Once two English envoys dined with this kindly potentate. When the guests were at table and a servant handed the soup, he was awkward enough to stumble with the tureen, and so the soup was spilled. When the Englishmen left the royal presence they saw in the yard the headless body of the servant who had spilled the soup. Infanticide seems to be common even to-day. If an infant is born on an unlucky day it is killed, and often tortured to death.

After Radima, who died in 1837, came Queen Ranavalona, "who made her position secure by murdering all the lawful heirs to the throne." Later, when the leading representatives of the English mission had an interview with her, she asked what they intended doing. Their reply was that they hoped to educate her people. The Queen's next query was "whether they could not teach her people something more useful than Greek or Latin, and tell them how soap was made." The missionaries accordingly manufactured some soap for the Queen, which pleased her so much that she made certain concessions to them. Under the Rev. Mr. Miller's administration several churches and schools were established. When the French arrived in 1895 there were not less than 1,300 preaching stations, 1,000 native pastors, some 6,000 local preachers, and 80,000 church members.

Norman Duncan.

Norman Duncan, author of that popular series of stories dealing with life among Labrador fishermen and published in book form with the title "The Way of the Sea," is a Canadian, although he does not like being called an "American" a misnomer. He was born in Ontario, near Brantford, of North Ireland parentage and, added to a predilection for the sea, of which he is passionately fond, is perhaps to

KIPLING AND PYECROFT.

We have been wondering what those impatient readers of THE BOOK REVIEW who were provoked to expressions of wrath by the symbolism of Mr. Rudyard Kipling's poetical and mystical story called "They" are going to say and do when they read the same writer's equally cryptic but surely not beautiful or poetical narrative in the current number of The Metropolitan Magazine. "A Tour of Inspection" resembles "They" in certain noteworthy particulars; it differs from it, as the night from the day, as the jimson weed from the violet, in others equally important. We are bold enough to assume that, in its coarse and harsh way, "A Tour of Inspection" is as symbolical as "They" certainly is in a gentle and gracious manner.

Both stories belong to the later development of Mr. Kipling, and the one now immediately under consideration to what we may call his Pyecroft mood, when his mind, and the very soul of him, as it seems, are concerned wholly with matters grossly material. We very much prefer Mr. Kipling in his recent mood of mysticism. Doubtless there is nothing he does in either of these moods comparable for freshness and charm with the tales of India, its temples, its mysteries, its passions and treacheries and humors, which he told in the long ago. But that makes no difference.

In every one of his moods Mr. Kipling is still one of the formidable figures in contemporary literature. Even when he sang so strenuously and unmelodiously to cheer his fellow-Britons in the dark hours of the Boer war he was still the Kipling of "The Seven Seas," though the echo of those poems sounded faintly in the violent war songs. Even when he writes of Pyecroft he is still the Kipling of "Soldiers Three" and "Plain Tales from the Hills," and the narrator of the joyless monkey tricks of this machine clown, this Mascarille of the submarine and dynamite gun era, still reminds us, in odd passages and in clever turns of phrase, of the creator of Mulvaney and Ortheris and the chronicler of the bloodless victory at Lung-Tung-Pen. The announcement of a forthcoming new book of short stories by Kipling is one of the most gratifying announcements of the opening season, in spite of the certainty that Pyecroft must figure as the protagonist in more than one of the stories.

Pyecroft, as we understand him, is something in the electrical engineering line, and of marine associations. He is supposed to be full of inventiveness and humor. He is concerned, in this latest incarnation, with a fast running motor car, a barge laden with dynamite, a barge laden with potters' clay, a silent, unclassified, but drunken bargeman; another, of Welsh birth, still drunker, vociferous, and belligerent; a policeman, a gang of demoralized workmen, and a few unrelated nobodies. There is nothing of the slightest interest in any of the happenings; nothing to make one laugh, or cry; nothing to thrill, nothing to charm the senses. But the motor car flings "half a mile of road behind her with a silky purr"; it (or she) "sucks up" miles of territory "like an Italian eating macaroni"; the hot sun bakes the shingle on the channel shore; big guns "hiccough" in the hazy distance, black smoke pours out of tall chimneys, there are noise, discomfort, and profanity, and Mr. Kipling is happy in painting the bustle and confusion of this very hour.

That is all. Doubtless it is at once an impressionistic study of an actual scene and a symbolical picture of the present source of British greatness. Timid folk will prefer "They" and account its much decided unintelligibility as crystal clear, more lucid by poor and great surrealist and some distracted symbolism of "A Tour of Inspection."

We must not expect Mr. Kipling, or any writer, always to write in the same vein and always to meet the mood of every reader. When the spell of Pyecroft is upon him, though, his influence upon other writers is exerted at its worst. Inevitably Mr. Kipling's verbal tricks are imitated, often unconsciously. We have one plump but audacious American writer, very much in evidence just now, who feels the Kipling influence strongly, and makes his readers suffer. In this very number of The Metropolitan Magazine he uses "observe" as a noun, ("the observe of our Virginia Republican,") and he speaks of Patrick Henry's "silken rhetoric," which seems to us an unhappy phrase. Kipling, too, is fond of adjectives from "silk." We do not like his "silky purr" of an automobile. The automobiles we have known have not purred in a silky manner, if, indeed, they have purred at all.

"DIFFERENT TO."

The ears and the hearts of many Americans have been tortured by the Boeotian phrase "different to" on the lips of our otherwise agreeable visitors, but have submitted as to something belonging to the race and cherished accordingly. Now comes The Saturday Review of London, still an authority in the matter of good English usage, exposing "The Trespasses of To," not only in this but in other instances, some of which seem almost incredible.

The Review declares that "no one doubts that 'different from' is right and 'different to' wrong, nor pretends that it could be otherwise; and yet 'to' has all but ousted 'from'; and good speakers look on either unconcerned or helpless: or even as aiders and abettors of the trespass. Mr. Arthur Balfour is one of the guilty." We had noted that fact with grief and surprise, but had attributed it to Mr. Balfour's eccentric fondness for shocking minds of his own class in small things as a means of getting them used to his independence in larger ones. The argument of The Review for "different from" is conclusive. That is the only form that really expresses the intended meaning. If it were not so you could say "One star differs to another star in glory," which is unthinkable.

It appears that there are worse offenses to which Englishmen in England are prone. "Averse to" is a phrase a well-ordered mind would be averse from, and "allen to" is allen from the nicest usage; but what condemnation is too severe for "distinct to" and "remote to." Less frequent, though not less outrageous, are "inconsistent to" and "sympathize to." If these be at all characteristic instances of the treatment of our common tongue by our English brothers its safety lies on this side of the Atlantic.

Short-Lived Books.

London Globe.

There is no more painful sign of modern "hustle" than the everdecreasing lease of life allotted to novels nowadays. An interesting interview with a publisher in a monthly magazine which devotes itself to the fortunes of books, shows what an expert thinks of the matter. "Few people," he says, "realize how short the life of an average book is. Fifteen years ago you could count on its existence for two or three years. Now three books out of every four are as dead as mutton in three months." No wonder, with these facts staring them in the face, that modern writers are apt to scamp their work, and to take to the manufacture of short stories for the magazines, as both easier and more profitable than the planning and writing of long novels. Yet there is a small section of the public which prefers to read books after the first demand for them has ceased. Hazlitt, it may be remembered, mentions in one of his essays that he preferred his books when they had become, as it were, mellowed. There is something soothing and restful about reading a book which has been forgotten by the multitude. About the newly published novel, with its bright cover and crisp pages, there is an air of unreality. It is somehow more like an enlarged magazine than a novel. It is only when the cover begins to grow duller that the interior begins to grow more interesting.

Benson's New Novel.

"An Ark in Backwater" is said to be the title of the forthcoming new novel by E. F. Benson. The success of "The Challoners" has opened a new stage in the literary career of the author of "Dodo." The new story, it is said, will deal with the quiet life of a cathedral town. The title seems to hint at Norwich and the Norfolk Broads, but perhaps the ark and the backwater are both purely figurative.

Introductions and Prefaces.

E. Clarence Stedman has written an introduction for the forthcoming posthumous volume of poems by Guy Wetmore Carryl, which G. P. Putnam's Sons have in active preparation. At Mr. Stedman's suggestion the title has been changed from "The Tuition of Time" to "The Garden of Years." A memorial quatrain has been contributed by Carolyn Wells, which will be used in place of the dedication lines written by the author. It reads as follows:

Yes, the gods loved him. In his one brief hour
They gave him all fair gifts within their power.
Yet, oh, the pity of it! Would that they Had paused ere they bestowed their final dower.

In the preface of the new book by Joseph Bucklin Bishop, "Our Political Drama," Stanwood's "History of the Presidency" is spoken of as "an inexhaustible mine of exact information upon all subjects connected with conventions, campaigns, and elections." There is a rumor that it will be made the unofficial handbook of the Democratic Party.

In the preface to his romance, "The Pagan's Progress," which is appearing from the press of A. S. Barnes & Co., Gouverneur Morris contrasts the beliefs and deaths of the primitive and modern man and says: "Read, then, how Sunrise, the pagan, was born in the dark, and having suffered at the hands of death, came to see the light gleaming beyond, and the life."

At the threshold of his little volume of essays on "Journalism and Literature," H. W. Boynton says: "There is no more reason for spending two hours in reading the newspaper than in having one's boots blacked. Some people never make their way into the great establishment of letters further than the vestibule, where they spend their lives contentedly playing marbles with hallboys." It is to be hoped for his own sake that his strictures do not apply to the literary columns of the said newspapers.

Prof. William Knight says in his volume, "Retrospects," imported by the Scribners: "Neither finished portraiture nor detailed biography is aimed at, only a few 'praeterita' regarding some notable English men and women of the last century—which would otherwise have been unrecorded—are brought together and set down in a sort of miscellany."

Book Auction Season.

The book auction season will begin in this city Sept. 27, when the Anderson Auction Company will begin a two days' sale. The library of the actor Thomas W. Keene will be sold in these rooms Oct. 3. This is largely a collection of works on the drama and history of the English and American stage. Part III. of the collection of Augustus Toedteberg, comprising colored drawings and prints, engraved portraits and views, &c., will be sold Oct. 6 and 7, the fourth part following Oct. 14. Oct. 10 and 11 another miscellaneous collection will be offered.

Part IV. of the Toedteberg collection, containing nearly 800 autographic items, will be the season's first important sale. Among the authors represented in the collection are Keats, Poe, Irving, De Quincey, Carlyle, Emerson, Longfellow, Scott, Whittier, Campbell, Cooper, and Field. The drama is represented by the names of Edmund Kean, Macready, Edwin Booth, Mrs. Abington, Sheridan, Cooper, Forrest, and Mme. Malibran. One of the gems is the correspondence between David Garrick and the "fighting parson," later known as Sir Henry Bate Dudley, which led to the first appearance of Mrs. Siddons on the London stage. History is represented by Alexander Hamilton, "Light Horse" Harry Lee, Benedict Arnold, Nathaniel Greene, Lincoln, Gen. Knox, Franklin, Henry Laurens, Lafayette, Queen Victoria, and Napoleon I. and his Court and Marshals. The most attractive item in the sale is a letter written by John Keats to Fanny Brawne, four pages, quarto.

Book sales in Boston begin Sept. 28, when C. F. Libbie & Co. will sell a portion of the library of the late Roland Worthington. Later Messrs. Libbie & Co. will sell the libraries of Henry H. Darrah, (American first editions,) Dr. Charles W. Swan (scientific books,) and Joseph Barker Stearns, (first editions, Kelmscott books, and Americana.) In addition, this house has in preparation the autograph collection of the late Prof. Vincenzo Botta and Anne Charlotte Lynch Botta, his wife. The Botta collection includes the original horoscope of John Hancock, cast by Roger Rintoul in London in 1760.

London Publishing Neighborhoods.

One by one the London book publishing firms are deserting the neighborhood of Paternoster Row and St. Paul's Churchyard. The Longmans, (Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.,) the oldest house in London, contemporary with the famous Jacob Tonson, still remain there. So do the Blackwoods, the Hutchinsons, and Fisher Unwin. Heinemann, Dent, Long, the Putnams, the Scribners, Sidney Appleton, Gay & Bird, and many others are in Bedford Street and other thoroughfares of the Covent Garden neighborhood. The western side of Leicester Square, Waterloo Place, Vigo Street, and Albemarle Street are other publishing neighborhoods. The most westerly house is Mr. Murray's, which shares the honors of age with Longmans, and not far from it is the modern house of Harpers.

BARBERS.

WILLIAM ANDREWS, the industrious author of "Bygone England," has gathered together a multitude of interesting facts and many diverting anecdotes in a new book of "Studies in Minute History," called "At the Sign of the Barber's Pole," which is published at Cottingham, in Yorkshire, England, by J. R. Tutin, and sold for two shillings and ninepence. To begin with, Mr. Andrews gives a list of books that have helped him in compiling his own. These are all curious works, of which the ordinary reader has little or no knowledge. They include "Annals of the Barber Surgeons of London," by Sidney Young, (London, 1890;) "An Apology for the Beard," by Artium Magister, (London, 1562;) "Barbers' Company," by G. Lambert, F. S. A., (London, 1881;) "Barber-Surgeons and Chandlers," by D. Embleton, M. D., (Newcastle-on-Tyne, 1891;) "Barber's Shop," by R. W. Proctor, edited by W. E. A. Axon, (Manchester, 1883;) "Philosophy of Beards" by T. S. Cowing, (Ipswich;) "Some Account of the Beard and the Moustachio," by John Adey Repton, F. S. A., (London, 1839,) and "Why Shave?" by H. M., (London.) Besides these books Mr. Andrews has searched for facts and anecdotes in Notes and Queries and other periodicals, in cyclopaedias, books on costume, and old plays.

Mr. Andrews points out that the barber's pole and the three brass balls of the pawnbroking shops are all that are left of the signs of the olden time. It is difficult to trace the origin of the barber's pole and the meaning of its symbolism. It seems to date from the day of surgeon-barbers, but its meaning is not clear. The theory that it represents a bandage does not seem reasonable. Mr. Andrews regrets that the "old-fashioned barber has passed away." He says:

In years agone he was a notable tradesman, and was a many-sided man of business, for he shaved, cut hair, made wigs, bled, dressed wounds, and performed other offices. When the daily papers were not in the hands of the people he retailed the current news, and usually managed to scent the latest scandal, which he was not slow to make known—in confidence, and in an undertone, of course. He was an intelligent fellow, with wit as keen as his razor; urbane, and having the best of tempers. It has been truthfully said of this old-time tradesman that one might travel from pole to pole and never encounter an ill-natured or stupid barber.

In the days of Queen Elizabeth the barber-surgeon was a man of considerable importance. Nobles would frequently lodge over his shop, which was a gathering place of gallants. In those days beards were starched, and the long moustachios laboriously curled. The courtier wore a peaked beard; the soldier's was shaped like a spade. Hair was elaborately trimmed and frizzes and long love looks were worn.

If a poor man entered the shop he was polled for a twopence, and was soon trimmed around like a cheese and dismissed with scarce a "God speed you."

There was music in the fashionable barber shops of those days, and later, as there is nowadays at popular tables d'hôte. The cithern and guitar and the cymbals were always in evidence. Pepys speaks of "barbers' music" made with a "cittern" and "two candlesticks with money in them for symballs." There were women barbers in London as long ago as the reign of Charles II. Many antique barber shop yarns have come down through the ages and been adapted to various environments. Here is the original of a good one, which has been told many times and in many ways:

The Duke of C—— upon one occasion entered a small barber's shop in Barnard Castle, and upon inquiring for the master was answered by an apprentice of fourteen that he was not at home. "Can you shave, then?" asked the Duke. "Yes, Sir, I always do," was the reply. "But can you shave without cutting?" "Yes, Sir, I'll try," answered the youth. "Very well," said the Duke, while seating himself, and loading his pistol; "but look here—if you let any blood, as true as I sit here I'll blow your brains out! Now consider well before you begin." After a moment's reflection the boy began to make ready, and said: "I'm not afraid of cutting you, Sir," and in a short time had completed the feat without a scratch, to the complete satisfaction of the Duke. In gentle tones his Grace asked: "Were you not afraid of having your brains blown out, when you might have cut me so easily?"

"No, Sir, not at all: because I thought that as soon as I should happen to let any blood, before you could have time to fire I would cut your throat."

Before he reaches the weighty topic of hair powder Mr. Andrews has much to say, and quotes much that has been said by others of the famous beards of history and literature. He says the ancient Jews and Romans used hair powder. But the use of it in Europe in the eighteenth century o'erflowed the measure and helped to cause a scarcity of flour, which led to bread riots. There is much of interest in the chapter on "The Age of Wigs" and the humors of the epoch in which the mustache made its reappearance, early in the nineteenth century, are not slighted.

Pitman's Speller.

"Pitman's Commercial Speller" is so small that it can be carried in the waistcoat pocket. It contains more than 8,000 words. As the list is made up for the commercial man, stenographer, or high school pupil, unusual or scientific words are not included. A useful feature is the appendix that contains abbreviations, the more common foreign phrases with English equivalents, a table of foreign money, and brief directions for punctuation and the use of capital letters. (New York: Isaac Pitman & Son. 35 cents.)

Maurice Low's New Book.

The volume on America in George Newnes's popular "Our Neighbor" series has been written by A. Maurice Low, the chief American correspondent of The London Morning Post and the writer of the monthly political article in The London National Review. It will be published in London late in the Autumn, and an American edition will also be issued.

Some Importations.

"The Interloper," which has just been brought out in this country, is one of the best selling books in England, where the author, Mrs. Violet Jacobs, is regarded as a very promising figure in contemporaneous fiction. She is the wife of Major Arthur Jacobs, who has had a distinguished military career, and who is now in Egypt. "The Interloper," according to the London critics, has distinction of style and story.

Under the title "Retrospects," Charles Scribner's Sons import a book of rare literary interest from the pen of William Knight, Emeritus Professor of Philosophy in the University of St. Andrews. The volume treats of Carlyle, Tennyson, Frederick Denison Maurice, Robert Browning, James Martineau, Arthur Stanley, Matthew Arnold, Gladstone, William Dwight Whitney, Smetham, Whitwell Elwin, Anna Swanwick, and J. Henry Shorthouse.

Books Out This Week.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. are publishing this week: "The Apology of Aylifte," a New York society novel by Ellen Olney Kirk; a new volume of entertaining essays by Agnes Repplier entitled "Compromises"; "Where Does the Sky Begin?" by Washington Gladden; "The Rider of the Black Horse," a Revolutionary story for boys by Everett T. Tomlinson; "The Flower Princess," containing four stories for children by Abbie Farwell Brown; "The Third Century of Charades" by William Bellamy, and "The Riverside Graded Song Book for Elementary Schools," edited by William M. Lawrence.

The Macmillan Company has out this week: "Manassas," by Upton Sinclair; "Red Cap Tales," by S. R. Crockett; "Sportsman Joe," by Edwyn Sandys, and "From Epicurus to Christ," by William De Witt Hyde, President of Bowdoin College.

The J. B. Lippincott Company is issuing a new novel by Rosa N. Carey entitled "At the Moorings," also "A History of the World," in which Charles Morris has condensed the principal facts of history, together with such interpretations as serve to bring them within the comprehension of younger readers. The same company is also issuing an edition of "Loves and Lovers of the Past," by Paul Gaulot, together with a new volume, "Shakespeare's Town and Time," by H. Snowden Ward and Catharine Weed Ward, authors of "The Dickens Land" and "Carlyle Country," which were published by the Lippincotts last year.

McClure, Phillips & Co. are issuing "Debonnaire," a novel of American Colonial days from the pen of William Farquhar Payson, author of "John Vytal." The scene is laid in Quebec and New Amsterdam. The hero is Louis de Cadillac, known as Louis le Debonnaire—a man of blithe spirit, and in reality a relative of Louis of France. He makes a wager with his messmates that he could win the hand of the fair Irène de Cadillac, belle of New Amsterdam and betrothed to Mynheer Van Bruch, Governor of the then Dutch city. By his cleverness and his sword he wins the wager and the maid. The book is said to resemble Tarkington's "Monsieur Beaucaire."

McClure-Phillips also present this week Mrs. Garnett's translation of Tolstoy's novel "War and Peace." This book, which has been long delayed through the illness of the translator, is the third in the series which already contains "Anna Karenina" and "Ivan Ilyitch." The aim of both translator and publisher is to put into the hands of readers of the English language a translation of the great Russian master's works which shall present in an adequate manner not only the words, but the spirit, of the originals. These three novels, belonging to Tolstoy's earlier period, are his strongest and freshest, and are especially the ones which every English-speaking reader should know in order fully to comprehend the later religio-reform work of the author.

G. P. Putnam's Sons present this week a third and revised edition of "A Guide to Historical Novels." "Boys of the Light Brigade: a Story of Spain and the Peninsular war," by Herbert Strang, with a preface by Lieut. Col. Willoughby Verner and illustrations by William Rainey, R. I.; "The Secret History of To-day, Being Revelations of a Diplomatic Spy," by Allen Upward; "Paul de Musset's "Mr. Wind and Madam Rain," presented in an English translation, by Emily Makepiece, with twenty-five quaint pictures by Charles Bennett; the first volume of Chancellor and Hewes's "History of the United States"; a new volume in Hancock's Japanese athletic series, entitled "Jiu Jitsu Combat Tricks," profusely illustrated with photographic reproductions; "The Dictionary of the Targumim," in two volumes, and, in Our Asiatic Neighbor series, "Indian Life in Town and Country," by Herbert Compton.

Forthcoming Magazine Features.

Country Life in America for October is the large Annual House-Building Number, presented as a complete manual with about 200 pictures which are intended to be practical and suggestive as well as beautiful. A feature entitled "Representative Country Homes" illustrates many types for the homemaker of moderate means, what the designers charge, and rules for estimating what a house will cost.

Joel Chandler Harris has finished a new series of Uncle Remus stories and verses upon which he had been working. They will appear in one of the monthly magazines shortly and ultimately will be brought out in book form by McClure, Phillips & Co.

Among the topics taken up by Prof. John Bates Clark in his article in the October Century on "The Real Dangers of the Trusts" are the danger line as to prices, "potential competition," the great danger of political corruption, alliance between the trust and the boss, the danger of "trust smashing," honest wealth and honest labor against monopolies, with some suggestions as to the remedies for the regulation of the trusts. Henry McCarter has provided the illustrations for Henry van Dyke's poem, "God of the Open Air," which will be printed in the same number. Gilbert H. Grosvenor will describe the discovery of Dr. George T. Moore, by which wornout land is "inoculated" and thereby made to yield fabulous crops.

Some New Editions.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. [illegible]

Andy Adams, and a third edition of "The Neighbor," by Prof. N. S. Shaler.

Winston Churchill's new novel has just gone into its second edition, the Macmillan Company reports. The first edition consisted of 125,000 copies. Margaret Horton Potter's novel of India in the thirteenth century, "The Flame Gatherers," has also gone into a second large edition; Maurice Hewlett's novel of Mary Stuart, "The Queen's Quair," is in its third; "The Woman Errant," by the author of "The Garden of a Commuter's Wife," is in its fourth, and Florence Morse Kingsley's tale of "The Singular Miss Smith" has just gone into its sixth.

Merriman's posthumous novel, "The Last Hope," issued in America by Charles Scribner's Sons, is about to pass into a large third edition.

A second large edition has just been ordered for that anonymous book of correspondence just issued by G. P. Putnam's Sons, with the title "Jessica Letters." The Putnams also announce new editions for Joseph Conrad's "Typhoon," James's "Catering for Two," Guy Thorne's "When It Was Dark," and Badsworth's "A Defense of Bridge."

McClure, Phillips & Co. are publishing a seventh edition of "Letters from a Chinese Official," a sixth edition of Stewart Edward White's "The Silent Places," and a third edition of Joel Chandler Harris's "A Little Union Scout."

Some Theological Books.

Prof Benjamin E. Bacon of Yale University is to publish, through Houghton, Mifflin & Co., next month a new book entitled "The Story of St. Paul." Prof. Bacon left New Haven this week to attend the Congress of Arts and Sciences at St. Louis, where he is to deliver an address. He will also speak at Illinois College's anniversary observances.

An extra volume of "The Dictionary of the Bible," published by the Scribners under the editorship of Dr. James Hastings, is announced for immediate publication. Since the publication of the original four volumes discoveries have been made which have an important bearing on the interpretation of both the Old and the New Testament. It is enough to name three subjects—Agrapha, Apocryphal Gospels, and Code of Hammurabi—to show the necessity of bringing the work down to date.

Thomas Whittaker is about to bring out "Day by Day Duty," a volume of short practical sermons by the Rev. H. J. Wilmot Buxton, whose homilies are widely known to lay readers, both here and abroad.

An index volume to the twenty-eight octavo volumes comprised in the New Testament section of "The Biblical Illustrator" is being presented by the Revells. The many thousand owners of this series will find its value greatly increased by the addition of this key to the whole. Some idea of the extent of the work may be gauged from the fact of its containing upward of 77,000 entries, cross indexed as far as possible to facilitate its usefulness, and making a volume in itself of over 500 pages uniform with the series.

The Bible in Modern Light.

Under this title, the Rev. Dr. John Wesley Conley has put into book form a course of lectures which he delivered in 1903 before the Bible department of the Woman's Club of Omaha, Neb. The lectures are given in the form in which they were originally presented. No attempt has been made at an exhaustive treatment of the subjects considered. The author has, however, endeavored to set forth "clearly, concisely, and comprehensively" such matters as "The Right Attitude of Mind Toward the Bible," "The Essential Character of the Bible," "The Composition of the Bible," "Manuscripts and Translations," "The Bible and Modern Science," "Ethics and the Bible," "The Bible and Woman," "The Educative Value of the Bible." The Bible and the Schools," "The Bible and Christ," "Modern Progress and the Bible," "The Influence of the Bible Upon Art," "Light from Ancient Monuments and Documents." In the course of his lecture on Bible study and education Dr. Conley says:

> Note the relation of Bible study to the cultivation of the memory. The Bible has been memorized as no other book has ever been. The importance attaching to its statements has led to the treasuring of them in the exact form in which they are given. Its promises, precepts, and warnings have been committed to memory because of their constant value. Its interesting stories and remarkable history appeal to childhood and have been stamped indelibly upon the memory of countless generations. As a mere educative expedient, the work of memorizing the Scriptures has been of very great value and its decline should be regarded as a real loss to the world of mental development.

The Bible also, he continues, appeals to the imagination. "No one can study the Bible without living over again the scenes of those olden days and feeling the presence of the heroes of faith." It also appeals to the logical faculty of the mind, as well as to the possibilities before man; while the social side of education also receives attention. (12mo. Cloth. Uncut. Pp. 238. FROM READERS.

New York Times Book Review:

Do the majority of authors receive their just reward for their labors? This is one of those questions that might be asked and answered in a dozen different ways, and still no satisfactory conclusion arrived at. However, an opinion may be volunteered, and perhaps no one will suffer thereby.

There are authors and authors, like books of various sizes, and this must be kept in mind. Then, again, there are subjects and subjects of which they write, and this, too, likewise must be remembered. Again, there are publishers and publishers, and still more publishers, and of course this must not be left out of consideration. So you see, when an ambitious person has received sufficient inspiration, and begins to express on paper what she or he had in her or his mind, there is always hovering over such a one uncertainty as to success. When the sheets have been reread for the sixteenth time, every "t" has been crossed and every "i" dotted, the author sends the package off by mail to the publisher, and waits for developments. Sometimes it is not necessary to wait long, for the author receives a sweet letter, but at the same time a business refusal. After she or he goes through this process of mental agony many times, the manuscript is accepted, or, what is worse still, rejected.

But does one of twenty authors really, truly, figure on riches to be derived from royalties? Could any sane person whose fame is unknown to the literary world entertain such thoughts? Is any one bold enough, optimistic enough, to look into the cold future, and as the press is printing the sheets of the new work, say, "Well, I am good for ten thousand"? Hardly possible for even the brightest to think such to be the case. The odds against a writer are too many. No author can be sure of his or her circle of readers, for in a single night many might drop out of the ranks. When the book is at last sent broadcast, (I mean editorially speaking, i. e., to editors and critics,) the reception may not be very warm, and then will follow some more agony.

At the present time writers of successful novels are making big sums, but how many "good sellers" are on the market? How few even get beyond the twenty-five thousand mark? How large a number never even reach a sale of five thousand copies? And, worse than this, how great a number never sell beyond one thousand? If this be true in fiction lines, it must be more so among heavier works. There are many standard volumes which have passable sales, but it generally takes a considerable time before a book is considered "standard," and from that date on the royalties will come in, slowly, to be sure, but nevertheless steadily. Biographical tomes of illustrious personages do of course render their authors some competence, but in only a few instances would it be what in business is called "good pay."

Writers should not dream of hidden wealth in the pen, and unless they use a fountain pen, should they keep their eyes on the gold which serves as their material of expression. If by chance wealthy they become, their happiness should be complete; but their aim and ambition should be to do good service, and in return receive fair remuneration for their efforts.

Mandan Territory.

New York Times Book Review:

Since my inquiry of Aug. 6 relating to Mandan Territory, I have found a map drawn and engraved by Stiles, Sherman & Smith, and entered in the Clerk's office of the District of Connecticut by Daniel Burgess in 1839. This map, prepared to be used with Roswell C. Smith's geography, is of "The United States and Texas," Mexico, and "Guatimala." Mandan District is practically the same as the one of 1835 which Mr. S. A. Briggs (Aug. 13) described, being made up of parts of North and South Dakota, Wyoming as far south as the forty-second parallel, and Montana to the Rocky Mountains. The southern course of the Missouri is its eastern boundary. Thus practically the whole "district" is west of the country over which the Mandan tribe of Indians claimed right, as they seldom or never went beyond the mouth of the Yellowstone River, as I understand it.

What authority did any mapmaker have for dividing his map to suit himself when it was not really so? Those who have so kindly answered my query are united in saying there never was such a district or territory recognized by the Government.

There are many interesting (and inaccurate) statements to be found, particularly on the part of the map marked Mandan. The Black Hills (really, of course, in what is now South Dakota) are placed in close juxtaposition to the Rocky Mountains in Southwestern Mandan. Tiny letters near by proclaim "Valley through which a loaded wagon may pass." The Rocky Mountains are labeled as 4,500 miles long and two and a quarter miles high. The rivers of (now) Montana are really accurately traced and the great falls of the Missouri are located. Presumably Lewis and Clark's maps aided in this. A minute representation of a steamer at the mouth of the Yellowstone River signifies that navigation extended to that point. Mexico came to the Oregon line, thus touching Mandan and the Black Hills in the angle of the divisions. Salt Lake and Cape Mendocino are only about 100 miles apart, according to the scale of miles, and both are in Mexico; while the whole country west of the Mississippi is as foreshortened as a railroad map of the present day which aims to show the air-line-ness of its particular railroad to the Pacific Coast over its competitors. Mark Twain and Balzac.

New York Times Book Review:

Is there anything new under the sun? We have all heard the witty saying of Mark Twain, "When was anything written before me? Then why should I do anything for posterity?" and thought, no doubt, that it was perfectly fresh and original. I do not believe that it was (or is) an intentional plagiarism. Yet in reading one of Balzac's minor works, "La Vieille Fille," dated October, 1836, I find the following almost identical version of the same story. He speaks of an English country gentleman who, hearing continually in the House of Commons of "posterity," got up and said: "Gentlemen, I am always hearing about posterity here, and I should like very much to know what that country has ever done for England?"

Each are the curious coincidences one meets in a miscellaneous course of reading.

"England Vanquished."

New York Times Book Review:

The "World War" by August Niemann may be a new book, but it is, apparently, a German adaptation of a French idea. About 1896 I was the guest of the Athenaeum Club in London. I found one day on the library table a volume entitled "Plus d'Angleterre." It pointed out that England held possessions all over the world in opposition to some power whose natural rights were constantly asserting themselves by way of protest or manifest irritation. On the other hand, from Siberia to the Atlantic and the Mediterranean there was little demand for an altered political map, except the notable instance, the unassimilated Provinces of Alsace-Lorraine. The writer, accordingly, proposed that France should agree with Germany to compensate her with as much of the British colonies, especially in Africa, as the German Emperor might consider an equivalent. Spain, of course, was to receive Gibraltar. The legal right of the Maltese to invite England to withdraw is unquestionable; and this would have been supported by the allied fleet.

I read the book with a feeling akin to terror. There was no "thread of a love story." It was Armageddon, with "the peace that reigned at Warsaw" or the tranquillity of Northern Africa in the sixth century as the certain outcome. The "Pax Britannica," now being sealed in Tibet, and the soothing syrup administered by Lord Milner to the convalescent South Africans, may not be altogether admirable, but "No More England" was an alternative which fairly staggered the imagination.

The diagnosis of moribund nations is not pleasant reading. The Mediterranean was infested with pirates too recently not to suggest that, if closed to peaceful commerce, it might remain so for a thousand years; as when the grain ship of St. Paul found no other successors than the slave-manned galleys of Christian and Mohammedan powers in the long ages, diversified by the Crusades and the sieges of Constantinople.

The most beautiful Anglican service in the world is without doubt the vesper in St. George's Chapel at Windsor—especially touching when the requiem for a dead knight is played the Sunday after his death. It happened one afternoon that, reflecting on this book, as I watched the low shadows of the sunset over the Eton Meadows, I found that I was standing by a silent bell from an Abyssinian church which ornaments the Windsor Terrace as a trophy of Napier's campaign. They called him Baron Magdala. No doubt "Migdol" is a word with no more local significance than "La Tour," whether d'Auvergne or any other place. But the Magdalen has given it special associations. Is it probable that if these hands were once raised against England there would be found a Saviour to say: "Thy sins be forgiven thee; go in peace"?

The battle of Dorking had a legitimate object, especially from an officer of the army. It related to defensive operations. But I remember here, in Newport, calling the attention of Sir Edward Thornton to the undoubted right of the Government of the United States to request the British Government to limit the fortifications at Bermuda to reasonable protection and the needs of peaceful commerce. If this "German Dream" is in the form of a story it may not be taken seriously. In any event, however, the author of the article "England Vanquished" should hunt up that "yellow peril" of less than twenty years ago. It made no stir at the time, but ideas, like Hannibal, sometimes seem to require an oath taken in infancy to secure fulfillment after full manhood is reached. It is not simply a question of territorial possessions of the empire. There are also subsidies to be repudiated. "Was für Plunder!" was an exclamation elicited by the spectacle of the loot of other nations rather than by the cupidity for houses and lands, mines and harbors, the national, self-developed wealth of England.

It was not a house in Surrey that Blücher coveted or a hop garden in Kent. The stolid British peasant who stands in his blue coat in front of the National Gallery has no thought for the foreign origin of his most valued treasures. But what does the British Museum hold of native production? Surely a Government has as much right to prevent the circulation of an incitement to a "World War" as if the proposed arson, murder, and robbery were on a smaller scale. Herr Niemann is only Fagin, written large. COPE WHITEHOUSE.

Dr. Johnson on Small Books.

New York Times Book Review:

In your issue of Aug. 20 you questioned the authenticity of the motto, "Books that you can hold in your hand and carry to the fire are the most useful, after all," ascribed to Dr. Johnson, and stated that search of Mr. Birbeck Hill's exhaustive index to Boswell did not enable you to verify the quotation. These words are not to be found in Boswell. They occur in Sir John Hawkin's "Life of Johnson," though not exactly in the form quoted by you, nor yet in the more abbreviated form used on the cover of Harper's Handy Series, which is as follows:

"Books you may hold readily in your hand are the most useful, after all.—Dr. Johnson."

As some of your readers may be interested in this matter, you may care to give the quotation at length.

Dr. Johnson used to say that no man read long together with a folio on his table. "Books," said he, "that you may have at hand for occasional reference, should be portable. Folios are tumbled about and spoiled. Large books are therefore bad companions. A man would not choose to have a house too large for his family. Now, sir, a library is furnished for use, and I would have it filled with books that are used. Therefore, sir, let me have books in small volumes, that I may have them about me. Books that you may hold readily in your hand are the most useful, after all. Who would have a wife of the size of Mrs. Boswell? Mrs. Boswell would be a great friend to have in the house. Her gifts from the beginning of the Pyramids of Watts, &c., at which, and by, a man can sit calm and unmoved, to an 8-pounder, when he HOWLS have been frightened at books of a larger size and of a more genteel appearance."

Boswell's answer caused the John eunuch to swallow him. His silence, therefore, must be taken as acquiescence that Mr. John was correct. E. C. VIRTAL.

Books for Winter Evenings.

New York Times Book Review:

Shortly the long Winter evenings will be here, and the students and others will be wondering how many spare hours they will have. A good book as a companion is one of the most profitable and delightful ways of spending such time, and as the food we eat largely determines our health, so in like manner the books we read affect our lives. If we could trace the lives of all the great men and women who have been the leaders of their fellowmen we should find, as a rule, that they read only the best of books.

I think biography, hymnology, astronomy, and natural history are among the most useful and interesting. I feel that I cannot conclude without mentioning the books that I believe would be of lifelong benefit, first and foremost of which is the Holy Bible. That is the Book that has been, and is to-day, the guiding star of all peoples. Also Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" will never lose its value and interest as a beacon of light to millions. One would feel tempted to give a list of what would seem to be the most desirable and useful books to read, but the choice of them must in a great measure be left to the individual reader, the main point being to select such books as shall be the best that are to be had. "Past" and "Executive."

New York Times Book Review:

Is there any word more often misused than the little word "past"? The use of it in the sense of "last," as the "past week," is almost universal, and yet I know of no dictionary that sanctions it. Every week is a "past week"; the week that has just gone by is the "last week."

I quite frequently read in the newspapers of "executive sessions" being held by Common Councils, golf clubs, and even committees. Because the executive sessions of Senates—those at which business relating to the Executive is considered—are secret, some people have concluded that "executive" means "secret." The blunder is so manifest that I am surprised that some of the carefully edited newspapers of New York City often commit it.

This misuse of 'executive" has become so common that probably the lexicographers of the next generation will have to give "secret" as one of the meanings of the word. It is thus that the present perfidious of many words arose. Originally they were correct but ignorance usage finally won them recognition.

"Bring" and "Carry."

New York Times Book Review:

While the discussion goes on about "lead" and "carry," I make bold to point out a misuse of the latter word in another direction. Our Latin professor of old would send a boy from the class with the day's report and the command: "Bring this out to the Principal." The professor is not only a first-class scholar, but a philologist of no mean repute; therefore his use of "bring" was of deliberate choice. I have heard the word used in the same sense by educated Americans, and would like to hear their defense of the (mis)usage. I think that the idea contained in such words as "carry," "fetch," "bring," and "take" is one of conveying, as in the French word "porter." If I am right, then "to bring" means to convey toward the speaker, and so does "to fetch," while "to take" and "to carry" are the proper expressions for conveying away from the speaker.

Mistakes of Dickens.

New York Times Book Review:

Is it not about time for the supercritical readers of Dickens to cease their grumbling at the slips (?) made by the great novelist in having Squeers command the pupils of Dotheboys Hall to pull weeds in the Winter? I can assure those readers that I have pulled weeds from the ground through the frozen snow—over in New Jersey. This I did to convince my Swedish gardener that he had been neglectful of his duties during the previous Summer.

I have seen weeds cropping out of the snow crust in Virginia. When I lived there I had a negro to work my garden on shares and I found my share to consist mainly of weeds, some of which had grown to such sturdiness that they waved in the wind about Christmas time.

Examine some ill-kept gardens this Winter and you will see weeds.

Dickens saw the humor of setting the pupils of Dotheboys Hall to pull weeds out of the frozen ground long after their seeds had been shed to propagate their kind.

A Quotation from Thomas Jordan.

New York Times Book Review:

If "A. S. R." who questions as to the authorship of the "refrain, "We'll be damnably moldy a hundred years hence," which appears in my novel, "Sir Henry Morgan, Buccaneer," will look on page 200 of the book he will find that I have not claimed the authorship of the refrain, but have given the author's name. I have not the slightest idea who wrote it, but I found it in a book of Jordan's poems, published in London in 1664, and I have always supposed that Jordan was the author. CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY.

Morgan, Buccaneer," will look on Page 48 of that book he will see that I stated the poetry quoted was written "by a famous poet of London town." This poet was Master Thomas Jordan, (1612(?)—85.) The poem is called "The Careless Gallant." Four verses of the poem may be found in "English Lyrics," selected and arranged by William Ernest Henly, published by J. B. Lippincott, Philadelphia, 1897. In the lack of this book there is a brief note concerning the author. I took the liberty of slightly altering the refrain which Master Teach was so fond of repeating, to suit the exigencies of the situation. I have no doubt that "A. S. R," has heard the refrain from some old salt in years gone by. The persistency of these old songs is amazing. Others of Jordan's somewhat ribald verses are still sung on occasion.

Few Good Books for Children.

New York Times Book Review:

It is a curious fact that while "Robinson Crusoe" and the "Swiss Family Robinson" always hold their own, other books, far better than the average output of the press, have vanished. Miss Martinau's "Peasant and the Prince" is no longer to be found, and two books which especially attracted me in my childhood seem to have perished—"Settlers at Home," a story of the settlement of the Flemings in the "Fen country" in England, and the "Young Islanders," intensely interesting, but almost too weird and tragic. I have forgotten the names of the authors and publishers. Can any of your readers tell me who they were? W. T. J.

Poe and a Chinese Poet.

Mr. W. C. Barnes of 182 Seventh Avenue, Brooklyn, New York City, has printed a circular which he mails to inquirers who read his communication to THE TIMES BOOK REVIEW concerning the likeness of Poe's "Raven" to a Chinese poem by Kia Yi, B. C. 200. Mr. Barnes has had requests from many persons for copies of the translated Chinese poem, to whom he has mailed his circular. He writes: "I don't know whether to sue you for damages or congratulate you upon the extensive interest taken in your department. I think we will compromise upon the latter." In his circular he says:

Replying to a number of queries, it is perhaps wrong to directly charge Poe with plagiarism. He probably read a translation of this poem in his early years and the rhythm and "metrical swing" so impressed him that he unconsciously copied it in after life, as a bit of harmony might greet the ear and be retained for years, and repeated with the firm belief in its originality. It is more difficult to reconcile the correspondence between Poe's "The Cask of Amontillado" and Balzac's "Le Grande Breteche."

The attention of lovers of Poe is directed to the following, without which no collection of Poe is complete. It is issued by the Burrows Brothers Company, 137 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio: "A Defense of Edgar Allan Poe. Life, Character, and Dying Declarations of the Poet. By John J. Moran, M. D. Royal 8vo, wrappers, pp. 87. 75 cents. (Postage 7 cents.) The official account of his death by his attending physician. Engraved portrait by Sartain, as frontispiece, and three woodcuts, one being a view of the hospital in which he died."

'Twas in the month of chill November,
As I can very well remember,
In dismal, gloomy crumbling halls,
Betwixt moss-covered, reeking walls,
An exiled poet lay—

On his bed of straw reclining,
Half despairing, half repining;
When, athwart the window sill,
Flew a bird of omen ill,
And seemed inclined to stay.

Index to Poetry.

With the briefest of introductions and the clearest of explanations, Edith Granger, A. B., has edited an "Index to Poetry and Recitations," a thousand-page quarto that includes over 30,000 titles from 369 books. (Chicago: A. C. McClurg, $5.) Teachers, reference librarians, booksellers, elocutionists, and hosts of others will find this book useful. The practical knowledge and library training shown throughout are worthy of praise; the mechanical arrangement, with its system of cross-references, is well done.

There are a title index, an author index, and a first-line index. The title index is the basis to which the references in the other two apply. All three are kept as nearly as possible a-title-a-line, each book indexed being referred to by a two or three letter symbol, when necessary, with the volume number attached. The "key to symbols," which precedes the text, is a list of the books from which the index was compiled, standard and popular collections of poetry and recitation books, including orations, tableaus, &c. These are arranged alphabetically by their titles, each giving the symbol, the author, editor, or compiler, the publisher, and the price—in short, a bibliography according to rule.

There is also a long list of the abbreviations used. The symbols are printed in such a way that the librarian can insert the call numbers of the books in the bibliography. The titles are so arranged that under the main title entry one will also find different, abridged, or selected titles referring to the same poem. By means of the cross-indexes a piece can be found, if included at all, under any title known to the searcher or by means of its first line or author.

An appendix that is designed to save time in schools and libraries classifies many titles under the heads: Special days, charades, dialogues, drills, &c.; noted personages and temperance selections. The book is strongly bound in half leather, with cloth sides, opens wide at every page, and is printed with generous margins on good paper. It has also a marginal thumb index.

W. H. Hudson's Books.

It is possible that W. H. Hudson's early book, "The Purple Lane," may be reprinted here now that his "Green Mansions" is achieving success both in England and in America. Like the later book, the first deals with South America, to which its entire edition was shipped, so that subsequent demands for it remain unfilled, even in England. The American edition of "Green Mansions" bears the imprint of G. P. Putnam's Sons.

IN AUSTRALIA.

THE NORTHERN TRIBES OF CENTRAL AUSTRALIA. By Baldwin Spencer, Professor of Biology in the University of Melbourne, and F. J. Gillen, Special Magistrate and Sub-Protector of Aborigines, South Australia. Cloth. Fully illustrated. Pp. 784. New York: The Macmillan Company.

From an anthropological point of view nothing can be more elaborate than the book entitled "The Northern Tribes of Central Australia." The authors are Baldwin Spencer, Professor of Biology in the University of Melbourne, and F. G. Gillen, who bears the title of Sub-Protector of the Aborigines of South Australia. The question having been raised as to the authenticity of certain of the photographs contained in the book the information is given that one of the authors "has spent the greater part of twenty years among the Arunta tribe, and that both of them are regarded as fully initiated members of that tribe."

Messrs. Spencer and Gillen were well received by the natives. Starting from the region of Lake Eyre, following down the Macpherson River, the shores of the Gulf of Carpentaria were reached. Witnessing so many of the ceremonies of the natives, the authors declare that they are not elaborate, but to the reader they will seem to be the opposite. These Australians have been rightly considered as the lowest in the scale of humanity. They should not, however, be disdained, for they assuredly represent man at the early beginning of his career—and the Australian is near to an animal only because he has been isolated. It must be borne in mind that so far the western half of Australia "is still, anthropologically, almost a terra incognita." It would hardly be worth while even to try to explain what are the divisions of families, for the topic is of the most complex character. It may be declared in their favor that wars between the various tribes are uncommon. The authors state that it is an error to think that the women are brutally treated by the men. Pretty generally women are obtained as wives by the peaceful system of betrothal, though the steps which lead up to this are most peculiar, not to call it by another name. Almost all the females of a certain age are scarred. These disfigurements are thus explained:

The great majority of the scars which mark the bodies of the women are self-inflicted, and, as a matter of fact, they are proud of them. Now and again, if a husband thinks that his wife has been unfaithful to him she will certainly meet with cruel treatment. Taking everything into account, however, the life of these savage women, judged from the point of view of their requirements in order to make life more or less comfortable, is far from being the miserable one it is so often pictured: It must also be remembered that what would cause serious pain to a civilized woman only results in a trifling discomfort to a savage.

As to physical features, there seems to be uniformity among these Australians. When born the infant is red or copper colored, and in the course of a few days takes on the chocolate color characteristic of the adult. To our eyes the adult Australian, man or woman, is the ugliest of human types, as seen by the photographs.

Incarnation and reincarnation are believed in. The ceremonies seem to be endless. Usually the bodies of the natives are ornamented with the pollen of certain flowers and the down of birds. There are innumerable restrictions as to food. Until quite recently Australians were ignorant of iron, and their implements were of stone. All stone implements, no matter from where, bear the strongest family resemblance. One single peculiarity in these Australian tools is that the haft is made of resin. The early people of the west coast of America used similar substances for fixing a stone weapon in a handle. All the implements of these Australians are smeared with red ochre and grease. Spears are common, and spear throwers are in use. This is the country of that curious weapon, the boomerang. The art instinct seems to be very poor. There are many examples printed of the legends common to the people which resemble those of other savages.

Mrs. Clay of Alabama.

Mrs. Clay of Alabama, whose memoirs have just been published through Doubleday, Page & Co., with the title "A Belle of the Fifties," has had a remarkable career. Her husband, Clement C. Clay, Jr., was a distinguished Southern statesman, who suffered imprisonment with Jefferson Davis in Fort Monroe. At one time she was regarded as the most eloquent woman in the South. She knew everybody worth knowing. Southerners and visitors in Southern homes, and her volume is packed with anecdotes concerning them—Presidents Lincoln, Pierce, Davis, and Buchanan, Patti, Jenny Lind, Mrs. Drew, Charlotte Cushman, Thackeray, "Blind Tom," and a host of others.

Castaigne's Novel.

André Castaigne, best known among the many Paris painters as an American magazine illustrator, is writing a novel. It will be entitled "Fata Morgana." Much of the material for the story has been drawn from artistic life in Paris and from the shores of the Adriatic. As he writes, the author-painter is preparing the illustrations for his book, which will ultimately bear the imprint of the Century Company.

Phillips's New Drama.

"Miriam, or the Sin of David," is the revised title of the new play by Stephen Phillips, which the Macmillan Company will shortly publish in book form. It was formerly announced as "David and Bathsheba." The theme is not exactly Biblical, as indicated by the title, for the scenes are not laid in Palestine. The story opens in the early days of the rise of Cromwell, and runs its course well through the great British civil war.

NOW READY

An Index to Poetry and Recitations

Being a Practical Reference Manual for the Librarian, Teacher, Bookseller, Elocutionist, etc.

Edited by EDITH GRANGER, A. B.

THIS important work, so long delayed by the necessary enlarging of the plan, is now ready for delivery. It is a volume of incalculable value, and the advance interest in its publication is an indication of the practical necessity for a book of such scope and comprehension. As a labor and time saving reference work it has never been equaled, and those for whom it is particularly intended should lose no time in placing it on their shelves.

The work indexes very nearly four hundred standard and popular collections of poetry and recitation books, including dialogues, orations, drills, etc., comprising about thirty thousand titles, arranged alphabetically under three heads —titles, authors, and first lines. An appendix contains lists of titles suitable for special occasions, such as Arbor Day, Washington's Birthday, etc., also lists of drills, tableaux, pantomimes, etc. These additional helps will be of great assistance.

THE ROSE-JAR.

some novels are bought on hearsay. Some are bought on the name of the author. We recently published a novel which has both the good opinion of readers and the reputation of its author to recommend it. It is called and is by E. F. BENSON. Perhaps you recall "Dodo" by the same author. If so, it may interest you to read what the Chicago Record-Herald has to say of Mr. Benson's new book:

"'The Challoners' is the best thing he has done. . . . His work is deft and true and sincere. An entertaining, well-written story, with deep feeling in it."

We've printed and sold already two large editions of "The Challoners." Your bookseller will tell you why.

Another novel worth knowing is by E. L. VOYNICH, the author of "The Gadfly" and "Jack Raymond." It is a Russian story and is called "OLIVE LATHAM"—"a most remarkable study of life and character," says the Philadelphia Press.

THE HOUSE OF FULFILMENT

Mrs. George Madden Martin has created a new girl heroine.

Alexina is her name, and she lived in the old South.

8 Illustrations by G. A. Williams.

BLAZED TRAIL STORIES

These lightning dramas of wild life flash on you pictures that you'll never forget of the northern pine forest, of the hot mesa and dusty plain, of the snowy Rockies. And the men! Roaring Dick, the lumber boss; the bashful, bald-headed Alfred, Nemesis of Plains Indians and stage robbers; Peter, prospecting to a tragic end in the Montana mountains; these and others are heroes, and don't know it, which is refreshing. The whole book is a breath of the frontier.

The Knitting of the Souls

A Story of Boston in Colonial Times

—BY—

MAUD CLARK GAY

The book compels attention by its force and feeling, and pleases by its accurate historical grasp, its graceful diction, and the unusual attractiveness of its illustrations, which are not only the best work of Mr. Merrill, but are put in colors by a process far superior to ordinary color printing.

HARPER'S BOOK NEWS.

The Georgians

In Mr. Harben's new book about Georgian life Abner Daniel is the chief character; his shrewd wit is even more keen and telling than in the earlier volume. In the role of match-maker old Abner adds a delightfully humorous touch to a sweet and tender love story.

MARK TWAIN
A Dog's Tale

This beautiful and touching little story of a dog is published in attractive holiday style with illustrations in color by W. T. Smedley. It is a perfect type of a perfect story. It is told from the dog's standpoint and makes a wide appeal to all classes of readers.

The Cycle of Life

A new science volume by C. W. Saleeby, dealing chiefly with the greater problems of the universe—the fate of the sun, moon, and earth, the wonders of the nebulæ, the meaning of life, etc. The author's style is fascinating, his language clear, and his attitude tolerant, making his volume one of the most readable and inspiring books of the day.

The Story of the Candlesticks

This is the famous story of Jean Valjean and the Bishop's silver candlesticks, from Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." The episode is a complete story in itself, and the scene between the Bishop and the ex-convict one of the most impressive in all literature. The little book is a dainty addition to the Wayside Series, bound in gray cartridge boards.

River-Land

A third nature book by Robert W. Chambers, following the attractive plan of Outdoorland and Orchard-Land. These books have proved most successful in teaching children about nature while entertaining them at the same time. This volume tells of the animals living in and around streams.

Little Precious

Every child who has read the "Lovable Tales of Janey, Josey and Joe" will be eager to know what new adventure this delightful little trio next experienced. Gertrude Smith's stories for children are original and quick to captivate the very young fancy.

Other New Books:

VERGILIUS: A Tale of the Coming of Christ, by Irving Bacheller.

A LADDER OF SWORDS, by Gilbert Parker.

THE FLOWER OF YOUTH, by Roy Rolfe Gilson.

JESS & CO., by J. J. Bell.

QUERIES.

To secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

"V.," Troy, N. Y.: "Who publishes Dinsmore's books on Dante?"

"Aids to the Study of Dante" and "The Teaching of Dante," (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., $1.50 each.)

L. M. REED, Kansas City, Mo.: "Kindly tell me something about Henry van Dyke, author of 'The Blue Flower.'"

Dr. van Dyke was born in Germantown, Penn., in 1852. He was graduated from Princeton in 1873, from the Princeton Theological Seminary in 1877, and from Berlin University in 1879. His first pastorate was the United Congregational Church, Newport, R. I., in 1878. In 1882 he was called to the pastorate of the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York City. In 1899 he accepted the Professorship of English Literature at Princeton. The wide range of his literary equipment is shown by the record of his varied work: "The Reality of Religion," "The Story of the Psalms," "The Poetry of Tennyson," "Sermons to Young Men," "Little Rivers," "The Gospel for an Age of Doubt," "The Builders and Other Poems," "The Gospel for a World of Sin," "The Toiling of Felix and Other Poems," "Fisherman's Luck and Other Uncertain Things," "The Ruling Passion," "The Blue Flower," &c.

SARA R. HATHAWAY, Linden, N. J.: "I inclose the hymn asked for by 'A. B. C. D.' in Appeals to Readers of Aug. 6. The author's name is not given in the hymn book from which I copied it.

"'Death worketh, let me work, too,
Death undoeth, let me do;
Busy as death my work I ply,
Till I rest in the rest of Eternity.

Time worketh, let me work, too,
Time undoeth, let me do;
Busy as time my work I ply,
Till I rest in the rest of Eternity.

Sin worketh, let me work, too,
Sin undoeth, let me do;
Busy as sin my work I ply,
Till I rest in the rest of Eternity.'"

"A. P.," Hawley Street, Boston, Mass.: "Can you tell me anything about T. C. Grattan, who was British Consul to the State of Massachusetts from 1839 to 1846 and contributed to American periodicals during that period?"

Thomas Colley Grattan (1792-1864) was born in Dublin, where he studied law for a short time. He later resided on the Continent for a long period, contributing to English magazines and publishing a number of books of miscellaneous character—a "History" of Switzerland, "Highways and Byways," (three series, in eight volumes, 1823-7;) "Traits of Travel," (three volumes, 1829;) "The Heiress of Bruges," 1831, and other novels. He came to the United States in 1839, and was British Consul at Boston until 1846, returning to England in the latter year. He assisted in the proceedings for the delimitation of the New England boundary in 1842, and published "The Boundary Question" in 1843. His writings on America included "Civilized America," two volumes, 1859, and "England and the Disrupted States of America," 1861.

HENRY A. DOWS, Post Office Box 5, Sabael, Hamilton County, N. Y.: "In reply to the inquiry of 'I. M.' as to some method of filing and classifying newspaper clippings, would mention that I have used the 'Decimal Classification and Relative Index' of Melvil Dewey for eighteen years, and have found it most useful. It is published at $5 by the Library Bureau of Boston. If your correspondent should wish further information it will give me pleasure to hear directly from him."

Several letters will be forwarded to "I. M." on receipt of a stamped and addressed envelope.

"S. F." Sacramento, Cal.: "Who was George Birkbeck Hill, and which were his principal works?"

George Birkbeck Hill, (1835-1903,) born in Tottenham, England, was at first a schoolmaster, but in later life devoted himself altogether to literature. He was one of the foremost students of the eighteenth century, and an authoritative writer on Dr. Johnson and his circle. His wide knowledge of men and manners of the time often led him into divagations quite foreign to the subject in hand; but for accuracy, critical insight, and suggestion, his writings on his favorite studies are likely to remain invaluable for a long period. His chief works were "Dr. Johnson: His Friends and His Critics," 1878; "Boswell's Correspondence," edited, 1879; Boswell's "Life of Johnson," edited, 1886; Johnson's "Rasselas," edited, 1887; "Wit and Wisdom of Dr. Johnson," 1888; Goldsmith's "Traveller," edited, 1888; "Select Essays of Dr. Johnson," edited, 1889; "Footsteps of Dr. Johnson in Scotland," 1890; "Worldly Wisdom of Lord Chesterfield," 1891; "Letters of Johnson," edited, 1892; "Talks About Autographs," 1896; "Unpublished Letters of Swift," 1899, and "Memoirs of the Life of Edward Gibbon," 1900. He visited this country in 1896.

"B. A.," Lowell, Mass.: "What is the 'Thumb-Nail Series,' several references to which I have seen in various literary papers? What works does it comprise, and where can I get them?"

The "Thumb-Nail Series," issued by The Century Company, is a series of little gift books, published in stamped leather, each book in a box, at $1 per copy. The series includes selections from Horace, Epictetus, Cicero, and Socrates; Dickens's "Christmas Carol" and "The Cricket on the Hearth"; Sheridan's "Rivals" and "She Stoops to Conquer"; Lincoln's "Speeches and Letters," (a selection;) Franklin's "Poor Richard's Almanac," Pascal's "Thoughts," Irving's "Rip Van Winkle," Tennyson's "In Memoriam," &c. Recent additions to the series are Irving's "An Old English Christmas" and Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" and "As You Like It." See the Century Company's catalogue for fuller particulars.

I. LOVENBERG, Jr., Galveston, Texas: "The parody on 'Hiawatha,' referred to by 'C. M. G.,' Hartford, Conn., may be found in Carolyn Wells's 'Nonsense Anthology' under the title of 'The Modern Hiawatha,' and in 'A Book of American Humorous Verse' (Stone & Co., 1894) under the title of 'What Hiawatha Probably Did.' It is also given in Walsh's 'Handy Book of Literary Curiosities' on Page 873. In each of these it is credited to 'Anonymous.'"

'A correspondent of Queries identified the lines in question as those in an old parody of "Hiawatha," "The Song of Milkanwatha," 1856, but they do not entirely correspond with the latter, and are evidently of much later date. Apropos of Longfellow's poem in travestied form, Converse Cleaves, 2130 North Nineteenth Street, Philadelphia, writes: "It may interest your correspondent to know of another parody in the 'Hiawatha' vein, conceived and born in commercialism and utilized by an enterprising tradesman for the exploitation of his wares. It is entitled 'A Canadian Furrier's Ad. in 1859,' and begins:

"'If you ask us who is Swartzen,
Subject of these lively numbers,
We shall answer, we shall tell you,
That he is a famous furrier.'

"The lines can be found in 'American Notes and Queries,' Vol. VIII., Pages 170, 192, and 201, (The Westminster Publishing Company, 1892,) reproduced from The Montreal Transcript for January, 1859, and signed by 'William Boyd, Typ.'"

"E. D. D.," 81 New Street, Newark, N. J.: "In reply to 'Curious' in Queries of Sept. 10, I would say that my copy of 'Eolopoesis: American Rejected Addresses' has on the title page the following, written in pencil: 'By Dr. Jacob Bigelow of Boston.' Can you tell me who 'Dietrich Knickerbocker, Jun.' was? In the preface of his pamphlet entitled 'Rattlesnake Hill' are mentioned the names of 'Messrs. Bliss & White.' It is a bit of New Jerseyana. My copy lacks the title page."

"Dietrich Knickerbocker, Jun." is unknown to Queries. Can any of our readers aid "E. D. D."?

"C. S. U." Macon, Ga.: "Who are the publishers of Nellie Blanchan's books on birds?"

"How to Attract the Birds," $1.35; 'Birds That Hunt and Are Hunted,' $2, and "Bird Neighbors," $2—all published by Doubleday, Page & Co.

GEORGE J. A. HAUG, Oakwood, S. I., N. Y.: "I have a novel in Spanish called 'Un Heroe Polaco,' translated from the Polish (I think) of H. Sienkiewicz. Has this work been translated into English? If so, when, and who is its publisher?"

This is possibly Sienkiewicz's "With Fire and Sword," an English translation of which is issued by Little, Brown & Co. of Boston, at $1.50. Write to Little, Brown & Co. for further information. They are Sienkiewicz's American publishers.

W. C. BRECKENRIDGE, northwest corner of Twelfth and Spruce Streets, St. Louis, Mo.: "I herewith acknowledge receipt of a copy of the poem entitled 'Hail to the Stars and Stripes' which you forwarded to me on Sept. 12. I am under many obligations to you for your trouble in this matter, and wish also to acknowledge my indebtedness to your numerous readers who wrote me personally on the matter."

"F. R.," Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Please tell me the exact method to pursue to trace up a family coat of arms. What books can be best consulted on the subject and at what library can they be referred to?"

Consult the genealogical collection (one of the most extensive of its kind) in the Lenox Library Branch of the New York Public Library, Fifth Avenue and Seventieth Street.

THE REV. WILLIAM DUNN, Ponsonby Vicarage, England: "Can you give me information about H. Clay Trumbull, D. D., who lectured at the Episcopal Divinity School, Philadelphia, June 16-18, 1885, and published his lectures under the title of 'The Blood Covenant, a Primitive Rite, and Its Bearings Upon Scripture. By H. Clay Trumbull, author of Kadesh-Barnea.' Reprinted by George Ridgeway, London, 1887?"

Henry Clay Trumbull, (born in Connecticut in 1830,) a Congregational clergyman of Philadelphia, editor of The Sunday School Times, is author of many religious works, among which are the following, all published by Charles Scribner's Sons: "Shoes and Rations for a Long March; or, Needs and Supplies in Everyday Life," $1.50; "The Covenant of Salt," $1.50; "War Memories of an Army Chaplain," $2; "Studies in Oriental Social Life," $3; "Friendship the Master Passion," $3; "Kadesh-Barnea," $3; "The Blood Covenant," $2.50; "The Threshold Covenant," $2.50; "Yale Lectures on the Sunday School," $2; "Teaching and Teachers," $1.25; "The Knightly Soldier," $1.75; "Hints on Child Training" $1.25; "A Lie Never Justifiable," $1; "In Tribulation," $1; "A Model Superintendent," $1.25, and "Principles and Practice," six volumes, each 75 cents.

A. DA COSTA GOMEZ, 21 Third Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "In Queries of Sept. 17, 'Fulano,' Brooklyn, N. Y., asks about a translation made by the late Helen S. Conant of a Spanish poem. The poem referred to is, as Queries rightly believed, Francisco Sellen's 'Pro-Existencia,' and I have the pleasure of sending you herewith a copy of said translation for your correspondent."

"C. J." Elberon, N. J.: "Kindly tell me where I can get Pater's works, and give prices, &c."

"Studies in the History of the Renaissance," $2; "Marius the Epicurean," $2.25; "Imaginary Portraits," $1.50; "Appreciations," $1.75; "Plato and Platonism," $1.75; "Greek Studies," $1.75; "Miscellaneous Studies," $1.75; "Gaston de Latour," $1.50; "Essays from the Guardian," $3—all published by the Macmillan Company, and "Uncollected Essays," T. B. Mosher, Portland, Me., $3.

Appeals to Readers.

MARK W. DAVIS, Harrison, N. J.: "Who was 'Eliza,' author of 'The Outcast,' and where can her writings be bought or read? Where can 'The Literary Album of 1848 and 1849' be bought or seen?"

JOHN C. LUDRENOUGH, Mount Auburn Street, Cambridge, Mass.: "I have been anxious for some time to know the name and authorship of the poem beginning:

"'La Dame aux Camellias,
I think that was the play,
And the house was thronged from pit to dome
With the gallant and the gay.'"

Mrs. ANNIE SMITH ROSS, Librarian Carnegie Library, Charlotte, N. C.: "In Godey's Magazine for the year 1852 several stories appeared, 'Pleasing the Parish,' 'The Wrong Passenger,' &c., written by the author of 'Miss Bremer's Visit to Cooper's Landing,' 'Getting into Society,' 'Boarding House Politics,' &c. I wish to know who this writer was."

"W. A. P." Brighton Cottage, New Brighton, S. I., N. Y.: "Can any one give me the title of the poem (and also the name of the author) in which the following lines occur:

"'At night when the peaceful shadows
Have ended a toilsome day,
And alone I sit in the silence,
Afar from the world away,
Then thought like a great musician
Sweeps memory's wondrous keys,
And tunes my heart with a cadence
Of marvelous symphonies.'"

AGNES DORSEY, 290 Rush Street, Chicago, Ill.: "Where can I find the remaining lines of this poem:

"'You ask me if I love you,
If I love you good and true;
Sweetheart, answer me this question,
Do the flowers love the dew?'

"I was told that it was written by Eugene Field, but have been unable to find it."

Abner Daniel Again.

THE GEORGIANS. By Will N. Harben. 12mo. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

Readers and admirers of Mr. Will N. Harben's "Abner Daniel" will doubtless be glad to know that in Mr. Harben's new story, "The Georgians," Uncle Ab is again the hero. Such readers scarcely need an introduction to the genial old busybody who, in this story even more than in the former one, has his finger in every pie of public or private nature in his native town. Is it the love affair of Eric Vaughan which ran very crooked indeed? Abner Daniel straightens it all out smooth and nice and brings the girl to her lover's arms. Is it Si Warren's trial for murder, at which the accused man stands convicted because of the absence of the only important witness? Uncle Ab with untiring zeal scours the country from Texas to New York in search of the recreant witness, and eventually brings him forward. Is it the gigantic swindle scheme of a white-livered coward to steal $10,000 from a misguided old man? Brother Daniel with the skill of a Pinkerton detective ferrets out the buried past of the white-livered one and restores the money to the grateful old man. And last, is it the clearing of a misunderstanding and the closing of an ever-widening breach between a father and a son? Abner Daniel is again to the rescue.

And in spite of all these manifold duties Abner Daniel is never rushed for time. There are always a few spare moments to stop and exchange a friendly jest with a neighbor, swap yarns with the court clerk, preach the gospel of brotherly love to his Sunday school class, play a friendly practical joke on some one—in short, to help and encourage and love every living thing from man to beast that comes his way. This is Abner Daniel.

And Uncle Ab is not the only one addicted to the swapping of yarns. The leisurely life of the farmer and small townsman is admirably depicted by Mr. Harben; also there is an itinerant preacher whose method of procedure in the gentle art of saving souls is very similar in style to that of the late Sam Jones.

The Soldier of the Valley.

Charles Scribner's Sons announce that Nelson Lloyd's novel, "The Soldier of the Valley," which has been running as a serial in their magazine, will positively make its appearance before the end of the month. The valley, to which the soldier comes back wounded at twenty-three to be the village hero and schoolmaster, is peopled with a community delightfully simple and quaint. Of course, the soldier has his tranquil love story in scenes that have plenty of delightfully human humor and pathos in them.

THE PUBLISHERS.

Plans of Some of Them—Forthcoming New Books.

D. APPLETON & CO. have arranged to bring out a limited autograph edition of Admiral Schley's "Forty-five Years Under the Flag." Only 100 copies will be sold, and of these a large number have already been subscribed for in advance of publication. These copies will be bound in half-morocco with gilt top.

The new limited subscription editions of the works of Burroughs and of Longfellow, issued by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., have a special feature, which should be appreciated by book-lovers. They are printed on a paper having as a watermark the autograph of the author.

Alfred Henry Lewis's new novel, "The President," is being published in Australia, where his preceding novel, "The Boss," already enjoys a wide popularity.

Herbert B. Turner & Co. are about to bring out a detective story with the title "The Quincunx Case." The author has disguised his real name under the pseudonym of William Dent Pitman, the name of the unoffending artist in Robert Louis Stevenson's "Wrong Box."

"The Life of Principal Grant" is being issued by the Toronto house of Morang & Co. To this Canadian firm also belongs the credit of having issued within the year several volumes of "The Makers of Canada" series, a two-volume edition of "Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Liberal Party," and a "Life of Gladstone" in three volumes.

Dr. S. Weir Mitchell's "The Youth of Washington" will be published in book form by The Century Company Oct. 8. Its serial run will be brought to a close in the October number of The Century Magazine.

Oct. 4 has been definitely set as the date of publication of "The Recollections and Letters of Gen. Robert E. Lee," which will then be issued by Doubleday, Page & Co. A large part of the book is given up to cadet life at West Point as it was in the thirties.

The press of Lippincott announces the publication of "The Memoirs of Emma, Lady Hamilton," edited by W. H. Long. There is a frontispiece portrait of the subject, together with many valuable and interesting historical views and portraits.

The Dodge Publishing Company is about to present a new work by the author of "The Great Optimist" and "The Worth of Service," Leigh Mitchell Hodges. It is a brochure containing Mr. Hodges's essay on Stevenson's creed, "To be honest, to be kind," &c. The title of the publication will will be "The Life Worth While."

The new book by Thomas E. Watson, Populist candidate for President and author of a history of France and a life of Thomas Jefferson, will come from the press of D. Appleton & Co. Oct. 4, with the title "Bethany, A Story of the Old South." Mr. Watson therein tells the story of his own people, and develops a tale which is founded upon facts and real personages, which gives a picture from the intelligent and unprejudiced Southern point of view of Georgia just before and during the Civil War.

The Revells are publishing at once "Among the Burmans," by H. P. Cochrane, descriptive of the land, people, customs, and religions of Burma. It is said to be the only book which thoroughly covers the subject. It is illustrated from many photographs taken by the author.

D. Appleton & Co. are sending through the press at a rapid rate Hall Caine's new novel, "The Prodigal Son," which is having its serial run in Everybody's Magazine. The book, we are informed, will differ materially from the serial. Not only has Mr. Caine carefully revised the entire manuscript, but the story will be at least one-third longer than the serial. The text is divided into seven parts, and each part into several chapters. Each part has a motto, a quatrain from FitsGerald's version of Omar Khayyam.

A. S. Barnes & Co. announce the title of the new novel by George Cary Eggleston as "A Captain in the Ranks," and its date of publication, October. Primarily, it is not a novel of the civil war, but deals rather with the building up of the Middle West after the war. Like most of Mr. Eggleston's fiction, the story is more or less autobiographic, or rather presents the results of observations made by the author of the scenes and incidents in which he was an actor.

W. J. Ghent's new book, "Mass and Class," will shortly be published by the Macmillan Company. It is described as a more serious book than the author's "Our Benevolent Feudalism," and is said to be full of enlightening and suggestive distinctions between the various parts of the social body according to their various functions.

"Mr. Hawkins's Humorous Adventures," by Edgar Franklin, author of "How to Cook Husbands," is promised for early publication by the Dodge Publishing Company. It tells how Hawkins made inventions which would not work, amid much fun and not a little ironical pathos on the destiny of insufficient things.

H. G. Wells's long expected fantastic novel, "The Food of the Gods," is down for publication late this season by Charles Scribner's Sons. Its course as a serial in The Cosmopolitan was closely followed in this country.

The Home Life of the Jardines.

AT HOME WITH THE JARDINES. By Lilian Bell. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. $1.50.

Lilian Bell has found the true key to happiness. It is marriage. She explains this all in her latest story, "At Home with the Jardines." Most of the chapters in the book appeared, from time to time, last year in Harper's Bazar.

Miss Bell has an intimate style. She buttonholes her readers, so to speak, and tells them all about things. She confides to them how volcanic is her own nature and how angelic is Aubrey's, otherwise Mr. Jardine. There are many readers who like that style of writing.

Beginning with the first ecstatic days of their honeymoon, spent at the Waldorf, Miss Bell (writing from the personal point of view of Faith Jardine) makes a clean breast of everything from the psychological moment when a friend over the billiards recommended a cook to Aubrey; including the arrival of that mistress of the culinary arts as well as an unlimited vocabulary and versatile temper; past the house hunting stage; through the apartment living period; past quarrels with janitors and agents—yes, even landlords and owners; out at last to a peach orchard country, where with the energy and enthusiasm of youth Faith and the Angel begin housekeeping all over again.

Of course, this is only a general and hasty summary of the contents of the book. The details are to be read for one's self in the volume. Once the Jardines matched their wits against the janitor's and the agent's and won; another time they subjugated Mary—but in the end five healthy, romping youngsters proved the Wellington to their Napoleonic prowess, and in despair they fled to Peach Orchard.

In the book appear such old acquaintances as the Jimmies and Bee; also a few new friends are introduced.

The Love of a Willful Maid.

THE CASTLE COMEDY. By Thompson Buchanan. Illustrated and Decorated by Elizabeth Shippen Green. Post 8vo. New York: Harper & Brothers. Boxed, $2 net.

Ever since "Monsieur Beaucaire" first set the fashion, tales following closely upon the lines of that dainty little love story have appeared from time to time. The latest to take its place in this particular class is Mr. Thompson Buchanan's pretty little story of true love called "The Castle Comedy." There is not much to the story, to be sure—only the willful love of a willful maid whose black eyes showed her as one "who could jump the octave of emotions from laughter to rage, and strike not a mood between," and a dare-devil hero, who could be tender as well as brave, and noble withal. And this hero, a French soldier whose mother renounced her English patrimony to marry a foreign lover, vowed to return to England to see the estate that should have been his. There was a price on his head in England, but when "French Percy" vowed to go to see the English branch of his noble family, no price was high enough to make him break his resolve.

It is a diverting little comedy, and "French Percy" plays the part of dancing master for a while and then fights duels, and finally wins the maid with coal-black eyes—and afterward, after a harder struggle, wins her irascible old father. The illustrations and marginal decorations by Miss Elisabeth Shippen Green are worthy the story, and match it in delicacy and daintiness of conception.

The book, boxed and bound in lavender, after the style of other of Harper's holiday books of previous years, should make an attractive gift book for the coming holiday season.

Tales by Stevenson.

THE STORY OF A LIE, and Other Tales. By Robert Louis Stevenson. 16mo. Pp. vi-276. Boston: Herbert B. Turner & Co. $1.25.

This agreeable little volume will be received with pleasure by the admirers of Stevenson in his story-telling mood, for it is in a sense almost a new addition to the easily obtainable works of their author. It contains three stories—"The Story of a Lie," written in the steerage of the steamer Devonia in August, 1879, which has heretofore appeared only in the complete subscription editions of Stevenson's works, on account of a question of copyright; "The Misadventures of John Nicholson," till now issued only in paper covers outside of the subscription editions, and "The Body Snatcher," one of Stevenson's most gruesome fantasies, which he called a "crawler" and contributed to The Pall Mall as a "Christmas Extra" in 1884. Its appearance there was accompanied by that fantastic freak in advertising that so disgusted Stevenson, and might well have, by which six sandwich men were sent through the London streets bearing six skulls on six coffin lids to announce its publication.

The stories, of course, are not unknown. They have some of the most agreeable qualities of Stevenson's story-telling art—his crisp, finely chiseled phrasing, his cool impersonal humor, and the power of showing us a character and making his personages live and act in an atmosphere which, if it is sometimes too rarefied for the impression of reality, is one that gives an infinite pleasure. They are good stories of their kind, which is not Stevenson's greatest kind, nor that which raised his name to the height of its eminence. Stevensonians will be glad to have them in the convenient little edition in which they now appear.

MR. ALDEN'S VIEWS.

Swinburne's Poems—Mr. Wells's Latest Prophecy—Other Book Topics.

MR. SWINBURNE'S new volume, "A Channel Passage," has been received with praise such as has fallen to the lot of no English poet since Tennyson published the first instalment of the "Idyls of the King." Incredible as it may seem, there are nevertheless persons, knowing how to read and write, who have either never heard of Swinburne, or who do not consider him to be a great poet. In London Opinion there has lately been a correspondence in which the writers discussed the question, "Have We a Great Poet?" The first letter writer gave the names of half a dozen minor poets, and justly said that they could not be classed as great, and he thereupon concluded that England has now no great living poet. He never mentioned Mr. Swinburne's name. Possibly the letter writer belongs to the still existent class of people who confound poetry with Puritanism, and regard "Pollock's Course of Time" as a great poem. He may have heard that the "Poems and Ballads" were not the sort of verse that would have pleased John Knox, and consequently he may have assumed that their writer could not be a great poet. Certain it is that Mr. Swinburne occupies a decidedly higher place in public estimation than he has ever occupied before. Until lately he was in a measure overshadowed by Tennyson, but since Tennyson's death not only has his been the most conspicuous figure among living English writers, but there has been an evident readjustment of his claims, and the public has finally given to him the highest place among poets of the Victorian era.

Mr. H. G. Wells is, I am sorry to say, going to mount his tripod once more and prophesy in The Fortnightly Review for a series of months to come. The title of his new prophecies is to be "A Modern Utopia," and we may assume from the title that he means to show us just what modern civilisation should be, and what it is sure to be at some indefinite future time. Of course Mr. Wells has a perfect right to prophesy to an unlimited extent. He is very clever at that sort of thing, and it is the sort of thing that many people really like. But to those of us who like Mr. Wells's stories, it does seem a pity that he should spend his time in trying to improve the condition of mankind. I don't want to read Mr. Wells's Socialistic theories. I want to read another "Wheels of Chance," and another "Love and Mr. Lewisham." There are scores of men who are willing and anxious to prophesy, but there are very few who can write really good stories. Men like the late Mr. Bellamy were skilful and ingenious prophets, but they did not write good stories. Those who deal in prophecy and nothing else deserve no rebuke for the way in which they employ their time, but men like Mr. Wells, who can write stories that are a delight to all the English-speaking race, have really no right to turn prophets.

"A Modern Legionary" is a story professing to be written by one John Patrick Le Poer, telling the adventures of a young Irishman in the French Foreign Legion. Every one seems to take it for granted that it is a true story and that its author is really a man by the name of Le Poer. I may be mistaken, but it seems to me that any one who has read Mr. Roger Pocock's books and "A Modern Legionary" will have very little hesitation in giving to Mr. Pocock the entire credit for the book. Perhaps he did not write it, but in that case Mr. Le Poer writes remarkably like Mr. Pocock, and must have been an ardent and close student of the autobiographical story that Mr. Pocock wrote two or three years ago, and that was so generally read and liked.

Mr. T. W. H. Crosland is cleverly availing himself of the success of his book concerning "The Unspeakable Scot" by flooding the market with new books. He has just published a book called "The Lord of Creation," in which he undertakes to say smart and satirical things about men. Then he has also published "The Truth About Japan," a book which aims to show that nobody except Mr. Crosland really knows anything about Japan and the Japanese. Also, there is another new book by Mr. Crosland, entitled "The Five Notions" or some such name, which I have not seen, but which is said to consist of parodies of Mr. Kipling's poems. I am not sure that there is not still another new Crosland book, but if there is not there undoubtedly will be one at an early date. Mr. Crosland apparently thinks that to be impudent is to be successful. Oscar Wilde was impudent, but he was also witty. Mr. Max Beerbohm is impudent, but he is also extremely clever. Mr. Crosland is impudent and nothing more. I am not finding fault with Mr. Crosland for exploiting what he believes is a profitable field of writing. He has the right to choose his own field, and if he has so far met with success and has found that there are many people who like his books, he is quite justified in writing more of them. Unless Mr. Crosland writes something better than he has hitherto written, the chances are that in two or three years he will have vanished completely from the bookstalls. The public will before very long tire of impudence unadorned, and Mr. Crosland will jeer in vain at men, women, and things.

Mr. Anthony Hope's new book "In Double Harness" is well spoken of, as it was almost sure to be. Anything that Mr. Hope writes will be read and admired. For my own part I much prefer Mr. Hope when he writes of "The Prisoner of Zenda" or of "Simon Dale." His society stories, if they may be so called, are excellent in their way, but to me they have not the fascination of the stories of pure adventure. "In Double Harness" does not belong to the latter class, and, although it may be better art than "The Prisoner of Zenda" and may be better liked by the majority of the public, it is rather a disappointment to those who are longing for more chronicles of adventure.

Mr. Edward Marston, the veteran publisher, who has now retired from active business, is about to publish his autobiography, or, at all events, his reminiscences. The book will be entitled "After Work" and it is safe to say that it will be exceptionally interesting. In the course of his long career as a publisher Mr. Marston has made the acquaintance of a great many men and women in whom the public takes an interest, and in his forthcoming book he will have much to tell concerning them. I am particularly anxious to read his reminiscences of Stanley, whom he knew probably better than any other man in England. Stanley was underestimated during his whole life, and if Mr. Marston will do something to put the great explorer in his proper place as a king of men he will be doing a good work.

Another new book which will be published early in the Autumn is Mr. Maurice Hewlett's "Road in Tuscany." During the last year or two Mr. Hewlett has published from time to time delightful articles describing the byways of Tuscany. These he has now collected in a volume which every lover of Italy will be glad to possess. Mr. Hewlett and Mr. Carmichael are the two men who know Italy better than any other foreigners have ever known it. It is true that they appeal chiefly to those who know the Italy that is felt rather than seen, and their books might not interest the tourist whose conception of Italy as a country where there are big hotels kept by Swiss and small pensions kept by Germans. But there are a great many people who are capable of appreciating both Mr. Carmichael and Mr. Hewlett, and to these the new book will be an unspeakable joy.

Mr. Meredith has returned to his home at Boxhill in much better health than has been his for many months, but there is no promise of anything new from his pen. Mr. Zangwill is writing a series of papers on all sorts of topics in To-Day, and I notice that in his last paper he expresses a good deal of discontent with the Christian religion. It could be wished that Mr. Zangwill would give us another novel. We have waited a long time for a successor to that admirable book, "The Master," and it is to be hoped that we will not have to wait very much longer.

W. L. ALDEN.

London, Sept. 12, 1904.

Memories of "Jenny June."

The Woman's Press Club of New York City has prepared a memorial volume to Jane Cunningham Croly, better known as Jenny June. It is made up mainly of tributes and memories written by friends and associates in both private and club life. Mrs. Croly may justly be called one of the pioneers of women's clubs in America. She was one of the founders of Sorosis as well as the New York Woman's Press Club, of both of which she was for many years the President.

Born in England, when Jane Cunningham was yet quite young the family moved to New York State, settling in the neighborhood of Poughkeepsie. Later, acting as housekeeper in the household of her brother, then pastor of a Union Church in Massachusetts, her capacity for journalism first manifested itself. She edited a semi-monthly paper, every line of which was written by herself and a fellow-worker, and held readings of what she had written at semi-monthly church meetings. Later, in 1856, she married David C. Croly, a reporter on The New York Herald, and they began their married life on his salary of $14 per week. Thrown thus in the very vortex of a newspaper life, it is not surprising that Mrs. Croly soon began writing for the metropolitan papers.

In the book now issued tributes from the various members of the various clubs with which she was associated form the main material. A dedicatory poem by Ethel Morse introduces the other memories, which are written by her brother, the Rev. John Cunningham; Thaddeus B. Wakeman, showing Mrs. Croly's connection with the positivist movement; Harriet Holt Dey, on Mrs. Croly's club life; memorials and tributes from various clubs, and lastly, Mrs. Croly's own essays and addresses delivered at various times, as well as letters written to and by her.

The book is illustrated with portraits of Mrs. Croly taken at different periods of her life; Mr. Croly, fac similes of some of the resolutions adopted at her death, and a portion of one of her own letters. (Memories of Jane Cunningham Croly, "Jenny June." 8vo, pp. 282. Illustrated. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.)

"My Friend."

"My Friend" is a volume by James Frederick Mason and decorated in color by Amelia de Wolffers, which the Dodge Publishing Company considers a worthy successor to "The Book of Friendship," published by this house last year. It consists of passages on friendship, but of more intimate meaning than those in the former volume. It is in the same series as "The Book of Joy," "The Book of Cheer," and "The Book of Friendship."

ROOSEVELT TO CALL CONGRESS AT HAGUE

Will Ask the Nations to Take Up Arbitration Question Again.

MEETS FOREIGN DELEGATES

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—President Roosevelt announced this afternoon that, at an early date, he would ask the nations of the world to join in a second congress at The Hague for the promotion of arbitration.

The occasion of the announcement was the reception by the President of the delegates of the Interparliamentary Union, which recently held a session at St. Louis. At that session the following resolution was adopted unanimously:

Whereas, Enlightened public opinion and the spirit of modern civilization alike demand that controversies between nations be settled in the same manner as disputes between individuals are settled; that is, by the judgment of courts in accordance with recognized principles of law.

This conference requests that the several Governments of the world send delegates to an international conference to be convened at a time and place to be agreed upon by them for the consideration of the following questions:

1. Questions for the consideration of which the conference at The Hague expressed the wish that a future conference be called.

2. The negotiation of arbitration treaties between the nations represented at the conference to be convened.

3. The advisability of creating a congress of nations to convene periodically for the discussion of international questions.

And respectfully and cordially requests the President of the United States to invite all the nations to send representatives to such a conference.

Delegates Cheer Enthusiastically.

The President's acceptance of the terms of the resolution and the announcement of his purpose to promote the peace of the world by inviting all nations to participate in a second peace conference whose work should be supplemental to that of The Hague Conference was received by those present with enthusiastic applause. The delegates cheered and clapped their hands for nearly a full minute, and at the conclusion of the President's address they embraced the opportunity personally and individually to congratulate him very cordially.

At 2:30 o'clock about 150 delegates to the Interparliamentary Union, accompanied by perhaps a score of women and headed by Representative Bartholdt of St. Louis, the President of the union, marched in a body to the White House. They assembled in the East Room in a semi-circle facing the entrance from the main corridor. Ten minutes later the President appeared, accompanied by Secretary Loeb, Col. Charles S. Dromwell, his military aide; Major Charles McCauley, and two or three military and naval attachés.

Representative Bartholdt introduced the assemblage to the President and stated, in brief, the object of their meeting, saying in part:

"Fourteen different countries of Europe and, including the American Congress, fifteen parliaments of the world, are represented here by actual bearers of mandates from the people to pay their respects to you, Sir, and to advise you of the purpose of their noble mission.

"The Interparliamentary Union, which they represent, is composed of members of national legislative bodies who believe that peace between the several nations is just as desirable as peace between individuals of one and the same nation, and that peace can be secured and maintained by exactly the same means, namely, by arbitration.

Considered Friend of Its Cause.

"This organization has looked upon you, Mr. President, as a friend of its cause ever since you by actual performance recognized The Hague Court and referred to it the Venezuela controversy, though you had yourself been asked to arbitrate. It is now generally admitted that this your action, together with the Pius fund precedent, which also occurred under your Administration, saved the life of that great international tribunal.

"The American people being committed by these and many other precedents to the principles of international arbitration, it is the belief of those present that the people, irrespective of party, would applaud your taking the initiative in the convening of a second conference of Governments, which, we hope and trust, would result in the completion of the work begun at The Hague, in the negotiation of further arbitration treaties, and in the establishment of an international parliament for the consideration of questions which are of common concern to all."

Mr. Bartholdt then introduced to President Roosevelt Dr. Albert Gobat of Switzerland, General Secretary of the Interparliamentary Union, who presented formally to President Roosevelt the resolution of the union requesting him to call a second conference. Dr. Gobat addressed the President in French, with which the President is familiar, his speech being, in part, as follows:

"The Hague conference, unfortunately, had to postpone several questions it had intended to discuss, particularly the most important one of all—especially for Europe—that concerning the limitation of armaments. Five years have since elapsed, and no one has thought of calling a second conference of the States, the new conference that The Hague convention of July 19, 1899, had itself provided for.

"We look upon this institution as the starting point of the most important evolution ever entered into by mankind. It will at last embody the brotherhood of peoples, that community of the intellectual and material interests of nations that has always existed, but never until this day so imperatively demanded that it be recognized, furthered, and protected.

Compulsory Arbitration.

"The general conferences of States will regulate for the latter that which has been regulated for private persons for fifty centuries; they will make international arbitration compulsory; they will see to it

BEQUESTS TO TRADESMEN.

Grocer, Baker, and Servants Named in Wealthy Man's Will.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST CHESTER, Penn., Sept. 24.—Benjamin Matlack Everhart, who was this town's wealthiest citizen and a noted botanist as well, remembered all of his old servants and even his baker and his grocer in his will. There are several friends, too, who will share the money that relatives expected to get. The will was read to-day, and some of the bequests to servants are:

To Bridget Carroll, $25,000 in cash and three houses and lots.

To Annie Lynch, $5,000 in cash and two houses and lots.

To William Welch, coachman, two houses and lots.

Mrs. Mary Groecker, who conducts a bakery, and had served the family for many years, was remembered to the extent of $25,000 in cash and two mortgages against her property for $4,500 and $1,400 were canceled.

Dr. B. H. Warren, Dairy and Food Commissioner, who had been a friend of Mr. Everhart for many years, received a cash legacy of $25,000 and a plot of ground.

Chief of Police Robert O. Jeffers, who was on intimate terms with the deceased, and who looked after his comfort and safety, will get $5,000 and a house and lot. George D. Haines, who served the family with groceries, received $2,500.

Mrs. Mary Fawks Lee, a cousin, gets the old Everhart mansion on West Miner Street, besides $75,000 in United States bonds and considerable bank stock. Mayoneta Lee, her daughter, receives a house and lot and fifty-one shares of stock in different banks.

H. Rush Kervey, who looked after the business of the deceased, will get six houses and lots. Anna and Hannah Taylor, spinsters, were remembered to the extent of $1,500 each. About fifty other persons received houses and lots. The residue of the estate was left to Isiah Everhart, a cousin, who was made executor.

FORMER WHITNEY HORSE TAKEN

Stolen Animal Offered to Dry Dock Hotel Man.

Charged with having stolen a horse that was formerly in the string of the late William C. Whitney, but now the property of Joseph Fair of 615½ Hudson Street, Joseph Cavanagh of 76 Charles Street was arrested yesterday by Detectives Butler and Keogh of the West Twentieth Street Station. The horse was missed from a stable at 83 Fourth Avenue on the night of Sept. 9, and Mr. Fair reported the matter to the police.

The detectives learned from a veterinary surgeon that he had attended a horse answering the description of the missing one in a stable at 10 Seventh Avenue. At that place they learned the horse had been taken to the stable of Jacob Hertz, the proprietor of the Dry Dock Hotel, at Bowery and Third Street, at 23 Third Street. They say Hertz told them that Cavanagh had offered to sell the horse to him for $150. The money had not been paid, and the detectives waited for him to appear. He didn't appear at the hotel, however, so they went to his home and arrested him.

PRIZEFIGHT IN BROADWAY.

No Effort by Police to Prevent Set-To in Uncompleted Structure.

Without any attempt on the part of the police to prevent it, a group of men conducted an impromptu prize fight in an uncompleted public structure at Forty-seventh Street and Broadway just after 10 o'clock last night. The fifteen or twenty men, in parties of three and four, coming from the saloon at the southwest corner of Forty-seventh Street and Broadway, made their way at once to the entrance to the structure. Apparently no watchman was there, for the party went down the stairs and were out of sight for more than a quarter of an hour.

When the party emerged one man was being supported in the arms of two others. His nose and eyes were bruised. Another man, somewhat bruised but apparently triumphant, followed. The police reported that nothing could happen there without their knowing about it.

CANADIAN PACIFIC STRIKE.

Mechanics Fail to Get Increase in Wages and Walk Out.

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, Sept. 24.—The demand of the allied mechanical trades employed on the Canadian Pacific Railway for an increase of wages culminated to-day in a strike. Representatives of the men concerned had notified the company that unless their demands were acceded to by 11 o'clock they would leave their work.

A satisfactory response not being forthcoming, the men, about 700 in number, working in Winnipeg shops walked out. Men at Fort William and other points also quit. The increase asked meant from 3 to 5 cents per hour more than the men have been receiving.

DIVORCE IN TWENTY MINUTES.

Wife Also Gets More Than $50,000 Alimony in Chicago Case.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 24.—Judge Gibbons to-day granted Mrs. Anna A. Cummings a divorce from Norman P. Cummings, a real estate dealer. The proceedings occupied only twenty minutes. Cruelty was alleged by Mrs. Cummings.

She said her husband threw a fork at her last April, nearly destroying the sight of one eye. Alimony amounting to more than $50,000 was ordered. The Cummingses were married in 1890, and have two daughters. The husband offered no defense.

EMBEZZLER WED AFTER ARREST

Ex-State Official of Ohio Caught at Kansas City.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 24.—George M. Collier of Columbus, Ohio, formerly chief examiner of steam engineers of Ohio, who disappeared from Columbus a year ago, is under arrest here, charged with having embezzled $2,700 of the State's funds. Collier admits his guilt.

Late this afternoon Collier and Miss Hattie Hendricks of Columbus were married in the police matron's apartments in the City Hall.

BLEW WIFE'S HEAD OFF.

Then French Keymaker Killed Himself with the Gun.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Sept. 24.—Louis Bornand, a Frenchman, thirty-five years old, of Linden, placed the muzzle of a shotgun near the face of his wife, Eliza, last night and blew off her head. Then he put the barrel under his chin and killed himself. A grocer, who had just delivered some goods to Mrs. Bornand, heard the reports of the gun, and, rushing up stairs, found the two dead.

Bornand was an expert keymaker. It is said that he had recently been out of work. The Bornands had no children.

JAPANESE MARCHING TO SEIZE THE TIE PASS

Russian Troops Impatiently Awaiting Another Battle.

WINTER ALREADY SETS IN

The Mikado's Soldiers in Summer Uniforms Suffer from the Cold—Fortifying Liao-Yang.

HARBIN, Sept. 24.—A Japanese column is reported to be advancing along the Liao River on the Tie Pass, and the Russian troops are impatiently awaiting an engagement.

MUKDEN, Sept. 24.—A correspondent of The Associated Press reports from the east that the Japanese are renewing their advance, and had attempted a junction with the Eastern Division, (Kuroki's army.) Learning, however, that the Mukden road was occupied, they were compelled to return and take a northern route.

Quiet prevails here. The Russian advance guards are several miles south of the Hun River, and the cavalry has penetrated twenty miles to the southeastward.

According to a Chinese report received, the Japanese are actively engaged in fortifying Liao-Yang, and have completely demolished the railroad bridge across the Tai-tse River, of which the Russians only succeeded in burning the woodwork.

Two spies were captured this morning near the bivouac of the Fourth Corps. One was a Chinese bandit attired in the uniform of a Chinese officer, and the other a Japanese soldier wearing the costume of a Buddhist Lama. Both were armed with bows and arrows. The Japanese spoke some Russian. He was suffering from a bullet wound recently inflicted. Scouts from Gen. Mistchenko's command yesterday found two Japanese frozen to death. The temperature is now 23 degrees Fahrenheit.

It is reported that the Japanese, in view of the approaching Winter and in the expectation that the campaign will be prolonged, have purchased a great number of Canadian horses on account of the immunity of these animals from the effects of the cold.

The Chinese are nervous regarding the possibility of damage being done to the sacred tombs in this vicinity in the event of a battle taking place, but the Russians have assured them of the safety of the tombs.

GEN. KUROKI'S HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD, Sept. 19, Via Fusan, Sept. 24.—The first touch of the Manchurian Winter, which follows the Summer abruptly, came yesterday with a sudden cold wave, the thermometer registering 44 degrees during the night.

Much discomfort was experienced by the soldiers, who, clad in khaki, were sleeping outdoors. A supply of Winter clothing has begun to arrive, and all the men will soon be provided for in this respect.

NOT ENOUGH REINFORCEMENTS.

Troops from Russia Only Suffice to Counterbalance Losses, It Is Said.

GEN. OKU'S HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD, Via Fuson, Sept. 24.—Before the retreat northward began Russian officers told foreigners that the reinforcements brought into Manchuria since June last were only enough to counterbalance the casualties up to that date. If this is true the Russian forces now in Manchuria are no larger than when the battle of Wa-fan-Gow was fought on June 15.

There are persistent rumors among the Chinese that the Russians are evacuating Mukden and are preparing to make a desperate stand at Tie Pass.

Everything now awaits the result of the attack on Port Arthur.

JAPANESE GOT DA PASS.

But Russians Tell What a Gallant Russian Victory It Was.

BERLIN, Sept. 25.—Col. Gaedeke, the Tageblatt's correspondent in the Far East, telegraphing from Mukden under date of Sept. 24, says the Japanese occupied Da Pass on Sept. 22, after a light engagement.

HARBIN, Sept. 24.—Further details received of the fight at Da Pass say that on the evening of Sept. 19 the Russian scouts reported strong Japanese forces to be moving behind the pass.

Da Pass was occupied by Gen. Mistchenko's and Gen. Samsonoff's troops. They allowed the Japanese to approach within a short distance, and then fired several volleys and made a counter attack, routing and driving back the Japanese, who ran, throwing away their guns and ammunition. They were pursued by the Russian cavalry.

Having received reinforcements, the Japanese again advanced and attacked the Russians, at the same time endeavoring to turn the latter's flanks, though the main attack was directed upon the Russian centre. The second attack was also repulsed and the Russian cavalry again pursued the Japanese, securing many prisoners, most of whom were wounded.

FLOOD DAMAGE IN TEXAS.

Railroad Bridge Swept Away and Farming Property Deluged.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, Sept. 24.—News of considerable flood destruction in Southwestern Texas was received here this afternoon. The big steel bridge of the Southern Pacific over the Aroya River, a branch of the Rio Grande, has been swept away and immense railroad, farm, and live stock properties deluged.

The stream known as the Aroya Colorado is twenty-seven miles wide near Poesta, and many trains have stopped running. The wires leading to Brownsville, Corpus Christi, and San Antonio are down and the full extent of the damage is undeveloped.

Socialists Attack Germany.

BREMEN, Sept. 24.—At a meeting of the Social Democratic Congress here to-day, after a debate in which the prosecution of German subjects at Konigsberg on the charges of treason against the Russian realm, lese majeste against Emperor Nicholas, and conspiracy to circulate literature forbidden in Russia by smuggling it across the frontier was discussed, resolutions were adopted pledging the support of the German Socialists to Russian workingmen, particularly by sending them printed matter, and demanding the passage of a law defining the rights of foreigners in Germany.

NO DREAMLAND RECEIVERSHIP.

This Coney Island Corporation on an Absolutely Solvent Basis.

The story published yesterday in THE NEW YORK TIMES under the caption "Receiver for Dreamland," was an imposition on this newspaper and its readers, as it had no foundation in fact, and the President and counsel of the Dreamland Amusement Company are warranted in insisting that the corporation be restored to its true footing before the public, that of an absolutely solvent business enterprise.

The article in question was the inexplicable work of a hitherto trusted agent of this newspaper, who, without any foundation whatever, as it now appears, represented that the company had made formal announcement to him at its headquarters that its affairs would be placed in the hands of a receiver.

The reverse is fact. The affairs of the company, its officials say, are of such a prospering character that its success the next season is assured. President William H. Reynolds and his legal adviser, Samuel Whitehouse, of Morris & Whitehouse, say that the net profits of the season which closed on Friday—one of weather deterrent to excursionists—was a round half million dollars, or more than 20 per cent. on the investment; that at the beginning of the year the paper of the company aggregated $686,000, and every note was taken up and paid when it became due, and that its indebtedness yesterday was only $10,000, exclusive of sundry claims which are in process of adjustment or arbitration. The latter, it was explained, are such that any corporation that has passed through a construction and equipment period is bound to challenge in the interest of stockholders. Their aggregate amount is not of a figure to cause the officers of Dreamland any concern, and the disputes hinge mainly on contract stipulations and fulfillment. All are likely to be adjusted without suit at law, while the company is fully prepared to settle all legal obligations.

Ex-Senator Reynolds and his legal adviser established the falsity of the statements in the article which imposed upon this newspaper and reflected upon the prosperity of the Dreamland Amusement Company, namely: That a receiver would be appointed for the company on Sept. 26, and that he would audit all bills against it; that forty creditors were clamoring at its headquarters Friday night; that one of its officials had repeated the story of "the coming receivership," and that President Reynolds had dropped out of the company.

President Reynolds said in regard to the last statement:

"There is not a word of truth in the story. I have not the slightest idea of severing my connection with the company. I have $250,000 invested in it, and I would be sorry to part with an investment that has proved so profitable."

AFTER BOSTON'S POSTMASTER.

Court Orders Him to Appear in Contempt Proceedings.

BOSTON, Sept. 24.—George A. Hibbard, Postmaster of Boston, has been summoned to appear before the United States Circuit Court for this district on Sept. 28, and show cause why he should not be adjudged in contempt.

The action is taken on petitions of George Stillings, Guy S. Stillings, and J. Franklin Knisely, respectively President, Treasurer, and State Manager of the Preferred Mercantile Company of Boston. The allegations are that in March last an order of the court was issued commanding the respondent not to return to the senders or to the Dead Letter Office any mail addressed to the company or to either of the petitioners, and that the respondent, in contempt of court, has violated this command.

HITS ROCK TO AVOID FLOAT.

Women on Launch in Danger in the East River.

Five persons were rescued by the harbor police from the naphtha launch Florida, which was run on Table Rock in Bronx Kills early yesterday morning to avoid being run down and sunk by one of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company's car floats.

Capt. Canova, the owner of the launch, was at the wheel when the accident happened, while in the cabin were Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Rosé, Miss Ethel Schroeder, and Mrs. Miller all of 24 West One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street.

The launch left her moorings off the Stuyvesant Yacht Club house, foot of East One Hundred and Thirty-second Street, early Friday afternoon with the party aboard and started for Rotan Point, Conn. Delayed on the return trip, it was 2 o'clock before the Bronx Kills was reached. The Florida swung to starboard to avoid Table Rock. At that moment Capt. Canova saw a big float loom up directly in front of him. He threw his wheel over and ran full speed upon Table Rock. There was a crash and the craft began to list to port. The women screamed and rushed out of the cabin.

The Florida was taken off yesterday and sent to dry dock for repairs.

"ELIZA SMITH" IDENTIFIED.

Prisoner Who Died in Yorkville Jail Was Mrs. Nordmark.

Otto Nordmark, a tailor of 405 East Nineteenth Street, called at the Morgue last night and identified the body of the woman known as Eliza Smith, who died in Yorkville Prison last Friday, as that of his wife, Elizabeth McElenny Nordmark. The tailor said he had been separated from his wife for two years on account of her inebriate habits, but he saw her three weeks ago, when she called at his home to see their children.

The mystery surrounding the case was partly cleared yesterday by an investigation made personally by Commissioner of Correction Langtry. He talked with five women prisoners, each of whom said they saw the Smith woman trying to choke herself with a piece of muslin torn from her clothing.

Coroner's Physician O'Hanlon, who performed an autopsy on the body, said there were finger imprints on the woman's throat, but that on account of the state of alcoholism in which she had died, it would be difficult to say that her death was due to strangulation. If she had been choked, Dr. O'Hanlon said, it might be considered a contributary cause of death, but he would not say that the woman had actually been strangled to death.

TWO MEN RESCUED FROM A BLAZING AUTO BOAT

The Macaroni Catches Fire During Hudson River Race.

IN DANGER OF EXPLOSION

Steersman and Engineer Were Balancing on Ends of Craft When Finally Picked Up.

William Wallace, the young Boston automobilist who has taken part in many automobile track racing meets, was rescued yesterday from a burning automobile boat in the Hudson River opposite Dobbs Ferry. With him at the time was his engineer, Lewis S. Tempfer. The men were in imminent danger of being blown up by an explosion of the gasoline tanks, and evidently realized the fact, for when they were rescued by a boat from a steam yacht going to the Ardsley Club Mr. Wallace was astride of the auto boat at the far end of the narrow bow, while the engineer was hanging on in the rear. Flames and black smoke were spouting out from the cockpit in the centre of the craft. The boat afterward burned to the water's edge.

The burning boat was the Macaroni, and it is the first fast auto boat to be completely destroyed by fire or other accident. Charles L. Seabury's Speedway had an explosion aboard in the Harlem River a few days ago when making a trial spin for the recent Challenge Cup races, and her prow was badly damaged, but she was quickly repaired and made an excellent showing in the races that finished yesterday for the trophy off the Columbia Yacht Club, foot of West Eighty-sixth Street.

The Macaroni was a competitor in the races, and on the first day did so well that she got second place, finishing next to W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.'s Mercedes VI. The boat was managed then by C. H. Tandeman, who entered her from the Atlantic Yacht Club. In the second race the boat met with a slight accident to her machinery and did not finish. She was then steered by E. R. Hollander. Yesterday William Wallace took the boat out. It was practically his first appearance in a big auto boat race, although he is favorably known as a skillful driver of fast automobiles, and has entered a ninety-horse power machine for the coming Vanderbilt cup race.

Of the ten boats that started in the race yesterday, the Macaroni was the sixth to get away under the handicap allowances. Everything went well until the boat was about two miles below the stake boat, where the first turn was made for the homeward journey. The stake boat was anchored just above the Ardsley Club, sixteen knots from the Columbia Yacht Club. When opposite Dobbs Ferry, the first signs of serious trouble were apparent. The boat broke her connecting pipe between the gasoline tank and the motor, and before power could be shut off a volume of flame shot up from the bottom of the boat.

It all occurred so suddenly that nothing could be done to put out the fire, and there was great danger that the tanks would explode. Mr. Wallace, who was steering the boat, at once made for the prow, where he balanced himself as far out as possible, ready to jump into the river if the explosion came, while his engineer took to the stern of the boat for temporary safety.

Only a few minutes before the fire broke out H. L. Bowden, whose racing automobiles have won several records in track meets, passed the Macaroni. Mr. Bowden was steering his fast boat, the Mercedes, U. S. A. When about half a mile above the Macaroni one of his engineers, looking back, saw the flame and smoke issuing from the hull of the Macaroni and called out to Mr. Bowden that Wallace's boat was burning up. Mr. Bowden immediately turned his boat back and ran down off one side of the burning craft, but at that time a boat had put off from a steam yacht going up the river. Mr. Wallace called out to Mr. Bowden that he was all right and advised him to continue the race, and the yacht took the men ashore, leaving the blazing auto boat to furnish a brilliant spectacle for a time, as she burned fiercely near the middle of the river.

The Macaroni is a new boat. She was designed and built by C. S. Burgess in Boston and was only brought to this city a week ago, especially for the Challenge Cup race. She was equipped with an Italian Fiat motor, giving a horse power of 40.38 by the official rating of the American Power Boat Association. In the first race she finished the short course of 27¼ miles in 1 hour 28 minutes 21 seconds.

BLIND MAN'S FALL LUCKY.

Tumbled, but Was Unhurt—Got Money and Free Ride.

Feeling his way along Broadway in front of the new Astor Hotel, Louis Remling, fifty-two years old of 432 West Forty-fifth Street, who is blind, missed his footing last night and fell down the steps leading to the barber shop. Several cabmen rushed down into the basement and picked the man up. He was practically uninjured.

A crowd had collected when he was taken up to the street. A well-dressed man in the crowd, hearing that Remling was blind, expressed his sympathy for the man and handed him a dollar bill. An electric hansom had just come up to the curb, and a man and woman in evening clothes alighted. When they heard of Remling's fall the woman whispered in the man's ear. He put his hand into his pocket, and, producing a five-dollar gold piece, pressed it into the blind man's hand. Others in the crowd followed suit, and soon Remling had about $15. One of the cabmen, not to be outdone, put the old man into his cab and gave him a free ride home.

C. VANDERBILT WON'T RUN.

Refuses Republican Nomination for Harrison's Congress Seat.

The Republican nomination for Congress in the Thirteenth District, which is at present represented by Francis Burton Harrison, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant Governor, has been offered to Cornelius Vanderbilt and declined.

The contest for the nomination is now thought to lie between ex-Park Commissioner Willcox and Herbert Parsons. The Democratic candidate probably will be James F. Mack, who ran on the Tammany ticket for the Assembly last year.

DROWNED AFTER ONE RESCUE.

Workman Fell a Second Time Into Newark Bay from Pier.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 24.—Dominick Serria, twenty-eight years old, of 356 Chestnut Street, fell into the Newark Bay from the Lehigh Valley Railroad bridge yesterday afternoon, and after reaching a pier where it was thought he was safe, became exhausted, fell overboard a second time, and was drowned. The body was not recovered until this morning.

County Physician McKenzie granted a burial permit.

VESUVIUS MORE ACTIVE.

Increased Eruptions, Accompanied by Earthquakes, Felt Twenty Miles.

NAPLES, Sept. 24.—The population of this city is somewhat alarmed by the increased eruption of Mount Vesuvius. Many foreigners, including a large number of Americans, have been attracted to Naples by the outbreak of the volcano. Service on the Funicular Railway has been suspended, the operation of the road being considered unsafe.

The eruption is accompanied by earthquakes, which are felt to a distance of twenty miles, and stones are thrown out to a height of 1,500 feet. The director of the observatory has declared that the eruption has not yet become dangerous.

30,000-VOLT SHOCK, LIVES.

Glens Falls Man Only Has Sore Toe as Result of Experience.

Special to The New York Times.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., Sept. 24.—An electric current of 30,000 volts passed through Frank J. Pinkerton while at work in the cell room of the Hudson River Water Power Company at Spier Falls yesterday. He was at no time unconscious, and his injuries are slight compared with the danger undergone.

The points of contact were badly burned, especially the great toe of the right foot, the exit from the body of the greater portion of the current.

BIG PROVIDENCE FIRE.

Entire Department Fighting Blaze in the North End.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 25.—At 1 o'clock this morning the entire Fire Department, excepting the reserves, was called out to a fire in the North End.

At that hour the Silver Spring Bleachery, Corliss Steam Engine Company, Darling's Box Shop, and Harris Lumber Yard were in flames.

ALLEGED LYNCHER ACQUITTED.

Trial at Huntsville, Ala., Results in a Verdict of Not Guilty.

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., Sept. 24.—The trial of Silas Worley, charged with arson in the Madison County Jail during the night of the lynching of Horace Maples, closed tonight.

A verdict of "Not guilty" was returned.

GIRLS SAW TRAIN AND LEAPED.

Crossing Trestle on Col. Astor's Estate —One May Be Fatally Hurt.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Sept. 24.—Two high school students, Hazel Weaver, sixteen, and Mary Teator, fifteen years old, of Rhinebeck, had a thrilling experience this afternoon while walking through Col. Astor's estate, Fern Cliffe. They had occasion to cross a high trestle of the Central New England Railroad, which passes through a part of the property, and had reached the middle of the structure when they saw a train coming.

The engineer saw the girls at the same time and put on brakes, but was unable to check the speed of his train. The girls hesitated a few seconds and then threw themselves from the trestle to the bed of a rocky stream, thirty feet below. Miss Teator jumped from one side of the trestle and Miss Weaver from the other.

On the side from which Miss Weaver jumped there is a steep grade, and down this she rolled for more than a hundred feet after striking the ground. She was unconscious when picked up, and was removed to Thompson Hospital at Rhinebeck. It is feared that her injuries may result fatally. Miss Teator escaped serious injury, but was badly bruised.

PARKER ODDS SHORTEN.

Few Wagers at 10 to 4½—Roosevelt Bettors Holding Out for 2 to 1.

Although few wagers were made on the curb yesterday, each was making offers to bet which proved unsatisfactory to the other side. There was a slight shifting of the odds in favor of Parker. Bets made included one of $450 to $1,000, the Parker end being taken by R. Leon and the Roosevelt money being placed by J. J. Judge, and another of $200 to $500, Bunnell, Buchanan & Co. betting the Parker money, and C. R. Hammerslough the Roosevelt cash.

Offerings on both the Presidential and State elections consisted of $20,000 at 2 to 1 on the National election, which Bunnell, Buchanan & Co. were commissioned to place, in addition to $7,000 even that Roosevelt would carry New York State; $1,000 to $2,000 that the Republicans would carry this State by 25,000 majority, and $2,000 even that the Republicans defeat the Democrats in West Virginia.

FRESH WATER FROM BERGS.

Schooner Gets Apparent Proof That Icebergs Are Found on Land.

GLOUCESTER, Mass., Sept. 24.—The fishing schooner Admiral Dewey, Capt. James Hayes, arrived here to-day from the arctic seas. Capt. Hayes reports that he encountered many icebergs in Davis Strait and off the coast of Baffin's Land. On a number of days, when the ice melted on the tops of bergs, the schooner's men obtained a supply of fresh water, thus indicating that the bergs were formed on land and were not frozen salt water.

FIRE SWEEPS DAWSON.

Loss in Alaskan City May Reach Quarter of a Million.

SEATTLE, Washington, Sept. 24.—The largest fire since 1899 occurred at Dawson last night. The loss is estimated at a quarter of a million dollars, with no insurance. The fire originated in the kitchen of the Cecil Hotel, formerly the McDonald Hotel, at Queen and Second Streets, and swept both sides of Queen Street, between Second and Third Avenues, as far south as the McDonald Trading Company, at Second Avenue, and the Westminster House, at Tihrd Avenue.

The Fire Department pulled down several structures on the north, preventing further spread of the flames.

HOOKED TO DEATH BY COW.

Horn Penetrated Boy's Skull—Lad Wore Red Sweater.

PENN YAN, N. Y., Sept. 24.—Eleven-year-old John Halpin, a son of James Halpin, was hooked to death in the street here to-day by a cow.

The animal, which was tied behind a wagon, broke her tether and attacked the boy, who was dressed in a red sweater. One horn penetrated his skull, causing almost instant death.

FIFTY-FOUR KILLED IN SOUTHERN CRASH

Passenger Trains Meet, Head On, Near Hodges, Tenn.

120 PERSONS ARE INJURED

Engineer Who Was Killed Thought to Have Disregarded Instructions—Congressman Gibson Hurt.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 24.—Running on a roadbed in a supposedly excellent condition of maintenance and equipped with every safeguard known to modern railroading, two trains on the Southern Railway, carrying many passengers, came together in a freightful head-on collision near Hodges, Tenn., to-day. Fifty-four persons were killed. One hundred and twenty were injured, several of whom probably will die.

This great loss of life resulted apparently from the disregarding of orders given to the two trains to meet at a station which for a long time has been their regular crossing point. The plea of failure to see either the station or signals could not be set up by the engineer of the west-bound train, were he alive, as the accident happened in broad daylight, and, according to the best information, he had the order in a little frame in front of him as his engine rushed by Newmarket station.

A mile and a half further on it came full upon an eastbound passenger train making for Hodges in compliance with instructions to meet the westbound train which carried the Pullmans from the east for Knoxville, Chattanooga, and other Southern cities.

The possibility exists that the engineer may have been asleep, but nothing is known save that the orders were not obeyed. The trains were on time and not making over thirty-five miles an hour, yet the impact as they rounded a curve and came suddenly upon each other was terrific.

The crash occurred at 10:18 o'clock this morning. The colliding trains were eastbound through passenger train No. 12 from Chattanooga to Salisbury, N. C., leaving Knoxville at 9:35 A. M., and west-bound local passenger train No. 15, from Bristol to Knoxville, due to arrive here at 11 A. M. Instead of taking the siding at Hodges, the west-bound train proceeded toward Knoxville.

Both Engineers Killed.

Both engines and the major portions of both trains were demolished, and why the orders were disregarded or misinterpreted will probably never be known, as the engineers of the two trains were crushed, their bodies remaining for hours under the wreckage of the locomotives.

The wrecked coaches were filled with dead and injured, and the rescue work was accomplished with great difficulty. A wrecking and special relief train left this city as soon as possible after the news of the disaster had been received here. The removal of the wreckage and the rescuing of the dead and wounded commenced immediately upon the arrival of this train.

Hundreds had been attracted from Hodges Station, Newmarket, and the many farmhouses in the vicinity of the wreck, and rendered every possible assistance.

The greatest loss of life occurred in the east-bound train, while in the west-bound train only the engine crew were killed. Relief trains were dispatched from Knoxville within an hour, and all physicians in the vicinity of the wreck were doing what they could when the local corps arrived.

The first train arrived here from the scene of the wreck at 4:20 o'clock bringing about seventy of the injured. Six of the injured aboard had died while en route to this city, and after their bodies were taken off the train proceeded to a point near the General Hospital, where vehicles were in waiting and a large force of physicians were ready to receive the wounded.

The next train from the wreck arrived shortly after 8 o'clock. It brought the bodies of forty-three dead. The six others who died en route bring the list up to forty-nine, and there are at least five more at the scene of the wreck, none of the bodies of the trainmen having yet been recovered.

John W. Brown, of Rogersville, Tenn., a newspaper editor, was in the rear coach of the westbound train. When the jolt came, he said, all the seats in the car were torn loose and people and seats were hurled to the front end of the car. When he recovered from the shock he heard screams and groans in every direction.

Saw Child Die.

"I left the car," said Mr. Brown, "as corn as I could and walked to the main part of the wreck. I saw a woman pinioned by a piece of split timber. A little child lay beneath the woman. I saw the child die.

"Another little girl, who was fearfully hurt, was calling for her mother. I have since learned that she was Lucille Connor of Knoxville, Tenn., and that both her parents were killed. I heard one woman praying earnestly to be spared for her children, but death relieved her sufferings in a few minutes."

Congressman Henry R. Gibson, from the Second Congressional District of Tennessee, was a passenger in the day coach of the east-bound train. He and one other man, whose name is not known, were the only persons to escape alive from the car.

Congressman Gibson was en route to Russellville, Tenn., to deliver a political address, and was reading his address when the collision occurred. When he realized what had happened he found his legs pinned fast, but he managed to extricate himself.

One glance at the car showed it to be a mass of human beings, backs of car seats, grips, baskets, and wearing apparel of all sorts. There was not a sign of life, except near his side, where a young man who had escaped death was struggling to get out.

VICE PRESIDENT EXPLAINS.

Mr. Finley Says That No Foresight of Management Could Have Availed.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—Vice President W. W. Finley of the Southern Railway, in explanation of the disaster near Hodges to-day, said:

"The accident was one which no foresight on the part of the management could anticipate or prevent. It occurred upon a railroad track which has no superior in America. It is laid with heavy, new rail, well ballasted with stone; the ties are standard in every respect. The equipment was up to the highest requirements and the crews of the colliding trains were old, trusted, and efficient employes, having been in service on that road for something like twenty years.

"The two trains were accustomed safely to pass each other in that immediate vicinity for many years, and were about on time. Careful order was issued to the west-bound train to meet the east-bound train at Newmarket, a few miles east of the scene of the accident. This order in some unaccountable way was overlooked or ignored by the west-bound train, and no power under the circumstances could have prevented the collision."

ODELL ON HOOKER CHARGES.

Governor Scores Democrats for Not Having Moved Impeachment.

Governor-Chairman Odell made his second attack on the Democratic platform last night. At the same time he announced that he had further criticisms to make, but that it was his intention to issue them in serial form. The subject of the Governor-Chairman's second attack was the plank of the Democratic platform which charged the Governor and "the Legislature which he controlled" with recreancy to duty in failing to take cognizance of graft charges publicly made against a Supreme Court Justice of this State in connection with postal frauds and other scandals. To this charge Gov. Odell formally replied as follows:

"Under the Constitution of this State a Justice of the Supreme Court may be removed only by concurrent resolution of both houses of the Legislature if two-thirds of all the members elected to each house concur.

"In the last Legislature twenty-one members of the Senate and fifty-three members of the Assembly were Democrats. Not one of them introduced a resolution for impeachment, and there is no initiative with the Governor in such cases. The Constitution gives him no right to remove a Judge of the Supreme Court for any cause. Their failure to do so is but an evidence of Democratic insincerity in their platform."

The Justice of the Supreme Court referred to in the statement of Gov. Odell is Justice Warren B. Hooker of the Eighth Judicial District, who was charged in the report made by Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Bristow on the postal frauds with having connection with postal frauds at Fredonia and Dunkirk. The State Bar Association took up the charges against Judge Hooker and appointed a sub-committee to investigate them.

Chautauqua County, in which Judge Hooker resides, is one of the most overwhelmingly Republican counties in the State, but the sensation which was created by the Hooker charges threatened a political upheaval. There was a demand on the part of some of the citizens of Fredonia that the Governor or the dominant party in the Legislature take cognizance of the charges, but the demand was ignored.

FAIRBANKS IN MINNESOTA.

Speaks in St. Paul After Delivering Speeches in Eight Towns.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 24.—After a tour through the First and Third Congressional Districts of this State, in which he made eight speeches, Senator Fairbanks, the Republican Vice Presidential candidate, reached this city this evening and closed a very successful day by addressing a large audience in the People's Church to-night.

The first speech of the day was made at 9 o'clock at Rushford, and this was followed by speeches in succession at Lanesborough, Spring Valley, Austin, Albert Lea, Owatonna, Faribault, Northfield, and St. Paul. Of the day meetings, Austin and Albert Lea furnished the largest audiences, but there were good crowds at all the stopping places and general interest was manifested.

Senator Fairbanks was accompanied during the day by United States Senators Dolliver and Clapp, Congressman Tawney, Robert C. Dunn, Republican candidate for Governor of Minnesota, and William Henry Eustis, who made the race for that office four years ago.

JULIUS M. MAYER CONFIDENT.

Tells Harlem Republicans Democratic National Ticket Is Weak.

An informal reception was given to Julius M. Mayer, Republican candidate for Attorney General, by the members of the Manhattan Republican Club at their rooms, 2,284 Seventh Avenue, last night. The rooms were crowded when President Moses M. McKee, the Republican leader of the district, introduced Mr. Mayer. The candidate spoke briefly, saying, in part:

"We thought that the Democrats would put up a National ticket this time that would be worthy of consideration on the part of the voters. As it is, the ticket is so weak that everything is plain sailing. We are confident of carrying not only the country but the State by a big majority."

Mr. Mayer was then introduced to the members of the club personally, the candidate shaking each one by the hand. Refreshments were served.

State Senator Keenan Renominated.

MINEOLA, L. I., Sept. 24.—Senator Luke A. Keenan was nominated to succeed himself at the Democratic Convention held here to-day. The district is the Second Senatorial, which is comprised of Queens and Nassau Counties. The nomination was not opposed.

Named for Congress in New Jersey.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Sept. 24.—Robert L. Stevens of Bernardsville was nominated for Congress to-day by the Democrats in the Fourth District, comprising Mercer, Hunterdon, and Somerset Counties.

HERRICK, JUST JUDGE AND ABLE POLITICIAN

An Honest Man with a Masterful Personality.

D. B. HILL'S BITTEREST FOE

A Political Leader Who Renders Non-Partisan Decisions — No Man's Man but His Own.

D Cady Herrick, incorruptible Judge—even non-partisan Judge—but skillful politician; bitter political enemy of David B. Hill, yet placed in nomination by Hill in the interests of party victory; crippled in body, but strong and forceful in personality—such is the Democratic candidate for Governor in a nutshell.

The worst that is said of his opponent, Mr. Higgins, is that he is not, in politics, a strong man; that if elected, he might be some one else's man. The worst enemy of D Cady Herrick would never dream of saying that of him.

The worst that is said of Herrick is that while on the bench he still remained active in politics, as so many up-State Judges do. But no one has ever intimated that his interest in politics colored his decisions, and on notable occasions he has decided adversely to the interests of his party.

One such instance was the noted one which became famous all over the State as the "Mylod return case," and which afterward figured prominently in the settlement of Judge Maynard's fate at the polls.

The title of the case was the People vs. State Board of Canvassers. The State board had been prohibited to canvass the Mylod returns, but notwithstanding the court's order had proceeded to canvass. Party feeling ran very high. A motion was made for an order to show cause before a Justice of the Supreme Court. He refused to grant it.

ACTION IN THE MAYNARD CASE.

The motion was appealed to the General Term, which consisted of two Democrats and one Republican. The Presiding Justice was a Democrat who was active in politics before going on the bench, as had been Judge Herrick.

It was the general belief that the Presiding Justice and Judge Herrick would stand together in the case, and the State Board of Canvassers would be protected. But this did not prove the fact.

Judge Herrick wrote the opinion reversing the action of the lower court, the other Democratic Judge writing the opposing opinion, and the Republican Judge sided with Herrick. The order to show cause was directed to be issued.

The case then went back to the trial court, and after hearing the canvassers they were punished for contempt. The case again went to the Appellate Division, and the prevailing opinion was for the second time written by Herrick.

The case was carried to the Court of Appeals, which affirmed the judgment, sustaining Herrick. The four Democratic Judges of the court split even on the judgment.

BUT HE GRANTED IT.

Once, when he was in Brooklyn, hearing motions at Special Term, Col. Norman S. Dike came to him and asked him to do a favor for the Kings County Republican organization. Herrick looked at him with a half-humorous glint of the eyes.

"Why don't you go to one of the Republican Judges around here if you want a thing like that?" he asked.

Dike started to explain, but Herrick cut him short and granted what he asked.

As a Judge Mr. Herrick stands high, and his integrity has never been questioned. No better proof of the esteem in which he is held as a Judge can be found than the attitude of the lawyers who practice before him.

The Albany County bar and the bar of several other counties urged his nomination for Judge of the Court of Appeals at a time when he was not thought of as a candidate for Governor. The Albany Club, which is non-political in its membership, is planning a reception for him in honor of his nomination, when not only members of the club but distinguished citizens who are not will express their appreciation of him as a man and a Judge, if not as a candidate.

PREFERRED TO BE TRIAL JUDGE.

It is by his own choice that he is a trial Judge. When he became a Justice of the Supreme Court he was immediately appointed a member of the General Term by his political enemy, Gov. Hill. When, under the revised Constitution, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court was established in 1895, Gov. Morton promptly designated Justice Herrick as one of its members.

He held the position for five years, and then, at his own request, was in 1900 returned to the Trial Term. He established a reputation for the celerity with which he dispatched work, and the lawyers welcomed his return with expressions of delight.

The Trial Term was also more congenial to the tastes of Judge Herrick, and he was sent to several districts outside his own, including the first and second—New York and Brooklyn—where his work received the highest commendation.

Despite the complaints of Herrick's continued interest in politics as a Judge, there are limits to his activity. He has a rule of his own on the subject, and while it differs a good deal from the rule which popular opinion marks out for Judges in some parts of the State, there is no question that he rigidly adheres to it and honestly entertains it.

This rule is that while every man, whether priest, Judge, or merchant, has a right as an American citizen to be active in politics, a Judge should not parade himself as a political speaker or in any other public way. Since going on the bench, therefore, he has never made a political speech, and has never been a delegate to a convention.

WOULDN'T DOCTOR RETURNS.

Something about the character of the man can be learned from one of the earliest incidents in his political career. It was when, as a struggling and hitherto unsuccessful young lawyer, he so brilliantly conducted the first important case that came to him that he was nominated for District Attorney. He was defeated at the polls; so was the Republican candidate for County Clerk.

Late on election night Mr. Herrick was waited upon by some politicians, who suggested to him the transposition of the figures for County Clerk and District Attorney in several of the election districts, so that they would elect the Republican candidate for County Clerk and himself, the Democratic candidate, for District Attorney.

"Gentlemen," said the young lawyer, "I don't want any office to which the people haven't seen fit to elect me."

And he so stoutly opposed the scheme that it was dropped.

Senator Depew in his speech the other day at Chenango County Fair severely arraigned Justice Herrick for remaining in politics after his elevation to the bench, but he was also forced to say:

"Judge Herrick has been an able and upright Judge. There can be no criticism upon him in his judicial capacity."

In the same speech Mr. Depew described Justice Herrick as "one of the ablest, most distinguished, and most reputable Judges of the Supreme Court of our State."

A prominent lawyer of thirty years' service on the bench in speaking of Herrick's judicial record recently declared he had studied Justice Herrick while he sat on the Appellate Bench, and had failed to discover the slightest political bias in his actions or decisions.

HIS ARBITRATION PLAN.

He is deeply interested in the labor question, and has originated and urged a plan for the settlement of labor disputes by compulsory arbitration. His plan is for a State constitutional amendment, an addition to Article VI., creating a Court of Compulsory Arbitration to consist of seven Judges.

All of the seven are to be ex-Justices of the Supreme Court or ex-Judges of the Court of Appeals, and they are to be appointed by the Chief Judge of the latter court, so as to take their appointment entirely out of politics.

The presiding Judge and four of the Associate Judges are to be designated for one year, or until the determination of any controversy pending before the court. The other two are to be designated for a specific term, to be decided upon by the Legislature.

This court, differing from other arbitration tribunals, would have power to enforce its decrees. It would be for the Legislature to decide what classes of cases should come before the court.

Justice Herrick thought that in the beginning the jurisdiction of the court might well be limited to controversies between employers and employes engaged in freight or passenger transportation, water and gas supply, or public work. But he believed that if the court proved a success public opinion would compel the submission of other differences between capital and labor to it.

"It is best," he said, "not to undertake too much at a time." He believed, however, that if the jurisdiction of the court were not gradually extended as a matter of course to all kinds of labor disputes it would be well to compel it by law.

DIDN'T BOLT BRYAN.

Although strongly opposed to Bryanism he did not bolt. "Democratic principles," said he, "are worth fighting for, and they must first be fought for within the lines of the Democratic Party. They cannot be fought for under the Republican banner."

Personally, he is a man whose appearance indicates the strong and masterful personality which all concede to be his. He is of medium height, strongly and compactly built, and has a strong face, a large nose, a big chin, and fine mouth. He looks as aggressive as he is. He is gray-haired, gray-eyed, and clean-shaven.

With this he is of a genial, frank disposition, has a good word for every one, and has time to tell a good story or crack a joke. Strong as are his political enmities, they have never extended into his private life, and he often sits at the social table with his bitterest political enemies, and is as free with them as with his friends.

As a political manager he is the legatee of Daniel Manning, who built up in Albany County one of the finest political machines in the State. When Manning went to Washington to become Cleveland's Secretary of the Treasury, the organization fell to Herrick, who maintained it in all its old strength until the advent of Hill in Albany County as a resident.

Herrick was not a Judge at that time. Hill bought Wolfert's Roost from the widow of Fritz Emmet and started in to establish himself as the boss.

Herrick found himself up against an extremely hard proposition, a fact which no one can doubt who is acquainted with Hill's talents as a politician. But Herrick held on to his organization, and from that day to this the two men have battled for the control of Albany County. At first Herrick found no difficulty in routing Hill, but as the years went on and Hill's persistent, quiet, indefatigable work continued, the fight became harder and harder.

IT ASTONISHED ALBANY.

The Hill-Herrick feud has been the talk of the State, and so bitter is it that at first when the news came to Albany of Herrick's nomination, with Hill as his nominator, it was scouted and laughed at as the wildest dream of political fakirs. Almost any knew well that Hill would go to almost any length for harmony, but that he would name his bitterest foe was unthinkable. When the news was verified incredulous Albany became joyous.

Herrick was a natural boy, reasonably studious, but not so much so as to rise above his classmates. He was born in Esperance, Schoharie County, April 12, 1846. When six years old his parents, Jonathan R. and Harriet Herrick, moved to Albany and settled in the Fifth Ward.

The district school in that ward was No. 8, and behind one of the clumsy white desks of the time young Herrick took his place. Though a cripple from infancy, he participated in boys' sports, and took his chances in riding down steep Lydius Street hill with the other boys.

Later he was sent to Gilmore's Academy, at Ballston, but returned to Albany ere long and entered the Albany Classical Institute, which was conducted by one of the recognized educators of the day, Prof. Anthony. Upon graduation young Herrick entered the law office of ex-Speaker Lyman Tremain and Judge Rufus W. Peckham, Sr. At the time these lawyers were leaders in their profession at the capital.

Young Herrick's abilities were quickly discerned, and he was sent to the Albany Law School, one of his classmates being William McKinley. He was graduated in 1870, and was shortly afterward admitted to practice.

HIS START IN PRACTICE.

That he might further prosecute his studies in the law, Mr. Herrick took the position of chief clerk in the law offices of Hungerford & Hotaling. The following year found him launched upon his career, with a shingle at his door bearing the legend:

Law Office of
D CADY HERRICK.

This later was amended to read:

D CADY HERRICK,
Attorney at Law.

The young lawyer, at the age of twenty-six, sat in his office and waited for clients. They did not come in fast, and this gave him an opportunity to read his books and study cases.

The first year his earnings were but $25; the second year only $250.

But Mr. Herrick was not to be discouraged, and he finally secured some commercial business. This was remunerative.

While yet a struggling practitioner Mr. Herrick was assigned as junior counsel to defend Emil Lowenstein. John Nelson, one of the ablest criminal lawyers at the time, was the senior counsel. He was taken ill, and Mr. Herrick had to carry on the defense.

AS DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

The masterly manner in which he handled this case astonished the older heads and gave the young lawyer fame at a leap. It was the reputation thus gained which resulted in his nomination for District Attorney by the Democrats in 1877, and then occurred the incident already related in which the defeated candidate refused to accept an illegal election.

In 1880 he was again nominated. It was supposed that a defeated candidate would have no chance of election, and the party leaders proposed that instead of running again for District Attorney he should accept an appointive office with a larger salary.

When this attractive proposition was made, Herrick said he would wait for Daniel Manning, who was out of town. When Manning returned, Herrick told him of the proposition, and added:

"I was beaten for that office. But I want that nomination or none."

He got it and was elected by 3,000 plurality. It was characteristic of the dogged determination of the man.

One of the political superstitions of that time was that no District Attorney in Albany County, no matter how successful his administration, could be re-elected. It was a law as inviolable as those of the Medes and Persians. Herrick smashed the tradition by being elected to the office again in 1883.

BECOMES A JUDGE.

Before the expiration of his second term Mr. Herrick became Corporation Counsel of the City of Albany. In his third term in this office he was elected, in 1891, Justice of the Supreme Court, Third Judicial Department, and was immediately appointed a member of the General Term by Gov. Hill.

Then came the test of right over political influence. In the very beginning of his judicial career Judge Herrick was either fortunate or unfortunate, as different people might view it, in having political cases brought before him. Lawyers of both parties sought to bring cases before him because of his wide knowledge of politics and public affairs.

Many thought that he might be easily handled for favorite politicians, but he turned out a disappointment to them. To many Democrats his action in these cases was astounding and distasteful.

One noted case, though not a political one, in which he came in for severe criticism at first, was that of Police Captain Diamond, which was sent to Albany for trial because of the bitter public feeling on the subject in New York. Diamond was indicted for neglect of duty in not closing houses of ill-fame.

When the case came up for trial various friends of "the system" were on hand for the purpose of influencing the jury. Justice Herrick immediately took the precaution of causing the jurors to be kept under guard and watched closely—a very unusual proceeding, except in murder cases.

SENTENCE OF DIAMOND.

Diamond was convicted. In sentencing him Justice Herrick took into consideration the fact that Diamond would be removed from office, and considered that in view of that fact, and also in view of the fact that Diamond was not an offender above other police Captains in New York, a fine of $1,000 would be sufficient punishment, taken in connection with the loss of his uniform.

The Court of Appeals affirmed Herrick in his case, as it did in nearly every case of his which reached the court of last resort. This was one of the very few cases in which convictions of police officials have been affirmed.

Diamond was removed from office and fined accordingly. Herrick was severely criticised for not sentencing him to imprisonment, but was defended on the ground that to have done so would have made a martyr of the offender and have made subsequent convictions difficult.

Justice Herrick's home life is most happy. Since becoming a Supreme Court Justice he has moved from the old Fifth to the Thirteenth Ward, and occupies the twin house of the late Daniel Manning, 151 Washington Avenue. He was married to Orissa H. Salisbury, daughter of Daniel Salisbury, in 1874, and there are three children—Helen D. Herrick, Bertha Herrick, and Charles J. Herrick, the latter one of the most promising of the younger members of the Albany bar.

The Judge is a member of the Fort Orange, Albany, and Press Clubs in Albany, and is held in highest esteem by their members.

He is a straightforward man, inspired with a conscientious resolve to fulfill to the best of his ability the difficult duties that have fallen to his lot in life, first as a lawyer struggling for a foothold, then as District Attorney and Corporation Counsel, and then as Supreme Court Justice. He is a tireless worker, a ready thinker, and an able director.

Justice Herrick enjoys the esteem and affection of his townsmen and the confidence of the public generally. He is clean-cut, honest, and courageous, and has never been known to desert a friend or follower; he has been known to suffer humiliation himself rather than place his fellows at a disadvantage. His popularity is manifested by the most cordial expressions of prominent lawyers irrespective of political affiliations, especially from Republicans of high standing.

He is a man of modest means, having never made use of his political position to get into any commercial enterprises, and has kept free and clean.

HERRICK HOLDS COURT.

Justice's Last Appearance on the Bench Will Be on Monday.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Sept. 24.—Justice D Cady Herrick, in accordance with his desire, was not interrupted by visitors to-day, and confined himself almost exclusively to court work. He entered the courtroom to hold special term at 10 o'clock, and on the conclusion of the sitting returned at once to his chambers.

Among the lawyers who congratulated the Justice on his nomination was Senator Edward T. Brackett of Saratoga. Another was J. F. Ahern of Broome County, who declared that not only were Broome County Democrats enthusiastic over the nominee of the party, but said there were many Republicans who resent the treatment accorded Col. George W. Dunn by Chairman-Governor Odell, and will vote for Herrick.

Justice Herrick will appear in court once more. Monday at 11 o'clock he will open and preside over the Trial Term of the Supreme Court. The court will be adjourned, and later the Presiding Justice of the Appellate Division will appoint some other Justice to take Justice Herrick's place at the next term. This will enable him to clear up the work now before him and send his resignation to the Governor. After he has resigned he will open political headquarters in a suite of offices in the Municipal Gas Company's Building in State Street.

HILL TO TOUR WEST VIRGINIA.

Democrats Start Active Campaign—Bryan Not to Speak There.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—It is announced that William J. Bryan will not, as expected, appear on the stump in West Virginia, but David B. Hill will make several speeches in the State.

The campaign is at last under headway for the Democrats, and they are sanguine of success. Ex-Senator Davis has aroused the activity of all his old leaders, and they are working together with a will. Cornwell, the Democratic candidate for Governor, is making two speeches a day, and will keep up the pace until election. This will take him into practically every important town and hamlet in the State.

An effort is being made by the Republicans to sidetrack the taxation issue this year and make everything count for the result on National issues.

Democratic State Chairman John T. McGraw, who is also National Committeeman, is working for both Davis and Cornwell, but his chief ambition is to get a Legislature that will send him to the United States Senate. He was beaten by Senator Scott six years ago.

The National phase of the campaign, which got a few touches from speeches this week by ex-Senator Towne of Minnesota, will rest until Oct. 11, when the special train holding David B. Hill, ex-Gov. Whyte of Maryland, Senator Daniel of Virginia, and Henry G. Davis will start out on its ten-day circle of the State. This tour is intended to counteract the visit of Senator Fairbanks, Speaker Cannon, Taft, Wilson, and other Cabinet officers to the State.

PRAISE ROOSEVELT, NOT ODELL

Monroe County Republican Convention Ignores Governor.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 24.—At the Monroe County Republican Convention to-day lengthy resolutions were passed praising the Administration of President Roosevelt and indorsing the State ticket, but omitting any reference to Gov. Odell or his administration.

The following nominations were made: For District Attorney—Stephen J. Warren of Henrietta; for County Purchasing Agent—Richard Gardiner of the Second Ward; for Coroners—Thomas A. Killip of the Seventh Ward and Henry Kleindienst of the Fifteenth Ward.

PAINTED OUT GROCERY SIGN.

Republican Committee at Middletown Placed Their Own Above It.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Sept. 24.—Through the selection of a headquarters from which to conduct the campaign the Republican City Committee of Middletown were terribly embarrassed and are the laughing stock of the town. Many good locations were offered to the committee, and they finally selected a large store building in the centre of the business district. The store had previously been used by a grocery firm, and in letters a foot long on the building was a sign, "Staple and Fancy Groceries."

When the sign, "Republican Headquarters," was placed above the other sign the committee failed to notice the significance of the combination for several days. To-day, however, a painter was hastily sent for, and the grocery sign obliterated, though half the building had to be painted over to cover it up.

FILIPINOS AND INDEPENDENCE.

Would Mean Turning Them Over to Some Other Power, Prof. Moses Says.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 24.—Several statements of particular interest made at the sectional meetings of the International Congress of Arts and Sciences by the leading speakers to-day follow:

Prof. Bernard Moses of the University of California, at the sectional meeting on colonial administration, said that civilization in the Philippine Islands was due to Spanish effort, and in conclusion said: "The granting of independence to the Filipinos would be equivalent to turning them over to some other power."

"The danger of imperialism is not from above, but from below," said Dr. Charles H. Fish of Centralia, Ill., in the discussion which followed the reading of papers at the sectional meeting on the history of America.

"We are not in danger from the general Government," the speaker continued. "The danger is that the people will let the affairs of their local government get into the hands of the general Government through the sheer lack of attention given to them."

In a criticism of the average character of teachers before the sectional meeting on the theory of education, Prof. Elmer E. Brown of the University of California said:

"If society would attain through education such a high end as to prepare men for moral activity, it must find better teachers, better selected, better trained, better supported, and make them the high stewards of its will."

JUDGE PARKER FINISHES HIS CONFERENCES HERE

SILENT AS TO HIS CAMPAIGN

Judge Said He Did Not Even Wish to Discuss the Weather—Senator Latimer One of His Visitors.

Completing his conferences with the Democratic campaign managers, Judge Alton B. Parker returned to his Esopus home shortly before noon yesterday. During the morning at the Hoffman House he saw Elliot Danforth, Senator Latimer of South Carolina, and August Belmont. None of them would talk later.

Judge Parker was up early, and just after breakfast saw his visitors, spent some time with each, packed his valise, and, accompanied only by Arthur McCausland, his secretary, entered an electric cab for the foot of West Forty-second Street. As he left by the side entrance of the Hoffman House, there was no demonstration, nor was there any on his way to the ferry to the Weehawken West Shore station.

On the way over the river the Judge was surrounded by a crowd of newspaper men, to whom he finally consented to talk, having denied himself to all reporters while in the city. As he was speaking to some of the newspaper men a few of the other passengers recognized the candidate and gathered about to hear what he had to say.

One passenger—a railroad man—asked the candidate to shake hands with him, which Judge Parker did, with a smile and a word of greeting. On the Weehawken side another railroad man rushed up and said he wanted "to shake hands with the next President."

"I am glad you think so," said Judge Parker, as he took the man's hand in a warm grasp.

Judge Parker told the newspaper men that he did not wish to be interviewed on any subject at all, not even the weather. He was asked, however, whether he had decided to speak at all during the campaign.

"That is a subject I cannot discuss," he said.

As the ferryboat got in midstream the Judge straightened himself up, sniffed the air, and smiled.

"That is bracing," he said. "It is better atmosphere than one gets at the Hoffman House."

"But Esopus is even better," was suggested.

"Indeed, it is," said the Judge with a laugh.

"Have you any statement to make concerning the results of your New York trip?" was asked.

"Nothing at all," he said.

"When will you return again?"

"That is another question I cannot answer now," he replied. He then proceeded to talk about generalities, and could not be induced to talk "news." Noticing a book under the arm of one of the reporters, he reached for it, asking what it was.

"The Essays of Schopenhauer," read the Judge from the cover. "That is a good book. You notice it took me some time to read the title, because I did not have my glasses on."

Then the candidate began to tell a story about the late Senator Harris, but the boat neared the Jersey shore before he got well started.

"I shall not be able to tell that story now," he said. "We have not the time to finish and the story is too good to be cut short."

When the boat had docked, Judge Parker and Mr. McCausland hurried to the train, the candidate bidding the newspaper men a cheery good-bye. The train left over the West Shore at 11:50 A. M., and was due to reach Esopus shortly after 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Special to The New York Times.

ROSEMOUNT, Esopus, N. Y., Sept. 24.—Rosemount welcomed Judge Parker home this afternoon. Immediately on his arrival he ordered his favorite saddle horse brought, and for the balance of the afternoon and early dusk he cantered about the roads leading west, north, and south from Esopus Village. The long sessions in the Hoffman House had told on him, and it was quite after hours in the saddle that he felt himself again.

That he will go to New York again next week is thought probable. When asked with reference to his possible appearance in a great mass meeting in New York, it developed that the project has not been as yet put squarely up to the candidate. Despite the importunities that he pledge himself to make stated speeches, he maintained the same attitude in New York as he has here, that he may speak a number of times before Nov. 8, but only when something occurs which in his opinion justifies a speech. Such speech or speeches may be delivered here or in New York or elsewhere. But it can be stated again authoritatively that at this time the candidate is without plans for speechmaking or touring.

Forming Parker Independent Clubs.

Independent Democrats who are friends of Judge Parker have started a movement to organize Parker independent clubs in each of the thirty-five Assembly districts in Manhattan and the Bronx. Thousands of letters, accompanied by enrollment blanks, have been mailed to voters in the two boroughs preliminary to a general enrollment. The letters urging forward the movement and requesting independent admirers of Judge Parker to enroll are signed by Carl Schurz, Charles Stewart Davison, Everett P. Wheeler, Frederic R. Coudert, Jr., and William Allaire Short.

LEADERS LEAVING TOWN.

Sheehan to Spend Much of Sunday at Esopus with Parker.

There was a general clearing out of Democratic leaders yesterday after Judge Parker left the city. One of the first to go was William F. Sheehan, who left his desk at National Committee headquarters and started for Esopus early in the afternoon. Mr. Sheehan will spend much of his time to-day with the candidate, but will be back in the city to-morrow or Tuesday.

Senator Charles A. Culberson of Texas, who has been at headquarters for some days, left for Washington a little later. He will start on his speaking tour to-morrow, spending considerable time in West Virginia. Ex-Congressman James Hamilton Lewis started for Chicago, after getting his speaking assignments, which book him in Indiana, West Virginia, Maryland, and Connecticut.

"I believe that Montana, Idaho, and Colorado will go Democratic," said Mr. Lewis.

Senator Latimer of South Carolina left for his home last night, after promising to start through West Virginia on a speaking tour within a few days. Ex-Gov. Hogg of Texas also left for Texas with National Committeeman R. M. Johnson of Houston. Gov. Hogg has promised to speak for the Parker and Davis ticket.

THOSE KENTUCKY LEVIES.

Republican National Committee Says It Has Stopped Them.

It was acknowledged yesterday by those in authority that the charge that campaign funds were being collected from Federal office holders in Kentucky were true, but it was stated that the collections had been stopped by the National Executive Committee as soon as that body had knowledge of what was being done.

When the campaign opened the Republican leaders in Kentucky made an arrangement with the National Committee to retain for use in the State such funds as they could collect there. When this arrangement was made, so it was said at the Republican National Headquarters yesterday, it was not supposed that the State Committee intended to levy tribute upon Federal office holders. As soon as the representatives of the National Committee in Chicago learned of the action of the Kentucky Republican leaders they notified them that they must at once cease getting contributions from such sources.

TYPE OF PANAMA CANAL NOT YET DECIDED UPON

Sea-Level Would Take Longer Than Lock Construction.

FRENCH DREDGES ANTIQUATED

Col. Biddle, a Washington Engineer, Gives Views After Month's Visit to the Isthmus.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—Col. Biddle, the Engineer Commissioner of this district, who spent a month on the Isthmus of Panama, says the commission has not definitely determined whether the waterway is to be a sea-level or lock canal.

"If a sea-level canal is chosen," he said, "the engineers must care for the Chagres River. It is not a large river, but it has considerable current. We followed its course for some distance. The river must be kept out of the canal, either by diverting it to the Atlantic or the Pacific. The divide at Culebra would have to be cut down 100 feet for a sea-level canal.

"If a lock canal is constructed, the summit level will be either sixty-five or eighty feet above the sea, or, according to the French company's plans, 100 feet. With a lock canal the Chagres River will be carried across the canal by means of a big lake.

"A dam would be built in the vicinity, the exact location not having been determined. The water from the river would empty into the lake from the northeast, cross the line of this lake, then flow into the Atlantic over a divide two miles on the other side of the cape, called the 'Gigantic Spillway.' Thus no currents would interfere with the navigation of the canal.

"The French excavated a canal at sea level for ten or fifteen miles on the Atlantic side, and for two or three miles on the Pacific. They also cut down along the line of the canal, in varying amounts, extending over a great part of the way.

"Much of its work can be made available, no matter what type of canal is built, although extra dimensions to accommodate the largest vessels afloat and to straighten the canal at certain points will necessitate a rehandling of some of the material excavated. Most of the work by the French will probably be a distinct gain."

Regarding the value of the tools and machinery left by the French company Col. Biddle said the dredges as a rule are antiquated and not of the type used now. The small machinery, such as engines, cars, rails, and the supplies distributed along the line that have been housed will be of value. Most of the buildings the French company put up can be used. These extend all the way from the offices at Panama to Colon.

Much of the materials of construction must be brought from the United States. Lumber for ordinary construction must come either from the Gulf or the Pacific Coast. There is some timber available on the zone for ties for the railroad, but most of the wood is lignum vitae and mahogany, which is too valuable for such use.

The time, the cost, or the number of men to be employed cannot be determined, Col. Biddle said, until the commission gathers its statistics as to the cost of building a canal according to the various types. It is believed that the construction of a sea-level canal will require a year or two longer, as the great task will be the reduction of the divide at several breaks where only a limited number of men could be employed.

BOTH SPARKED THE TEACHER.

Confession of Cochran of New York Implicates Walbridge of Missouri.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 24.—The shipment of a handsome copy of a book on Missouri to-day to John W. Cochran, an attorney of New York, will be the climax of an incident which has greatly amused the attachés of the Missouri Building at the World's Fair. The opening of the incident was the receipt of this letter:

Walter Williams, editor Missouri, The Great.

My Dear Sir: I desire to obtain one of your books on grand old Missouri. As I at one time courted the same girl with Cyrus P. Walbridge, your present candidate for the Governorship of Missouri, I think I am entitled to one of your valuable volumes. I am, respectfully yours,

JOHN W. COCHRAN,
667 East One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Street, New York City.

Williams replied that if Cochran would tell the story the request for the book would be granted. Cochran's second letter, containing this explanation, was as follows:

I went to school with a boy named Walbridge, now your candidate for Governor. We sparked the teacher. Ask him. He will tell you. He is my old chum Cy.

M'CARREN'S ONLY STUMP SPEECH THIS CAMPAIGN

Suburban Democrats at Homecrest Cheer Senatorial Oratory.

HAY WAGON THE BAND CHARIOT

Brooklyn Leader Ignores Power of Gesture and Substitutes Epigrams for Flamboyant Rhetoric.

It is a little unusual for a political boss to appear in the rôle of stump speaker, and additional interest is lent to Senator McCarren's appearance in that rôle by the announcement that it is his first and last for this campaign.

His oratorical production was made before the Democrats of Homecrest last night. Homecrest is one of the numerous Brooklyn settlements, and is near Coney Island. McCarren went out there to make his single address of the season because they were loyal to him in the primaries, but he says he can't make any more speeches because his work at headquarters takes all his time.

There is many a worse speaker than the Brooklyn chief. He somewhat resembles Senator Hanna, also a political boss, in the plain, direct, and rather forcible way in which he makes his points.

It was a regular country blow-out, lacking only the roasting ox to resemble a Maryland barbecue, and resembling exactly the rustic mass meetings down East. The Senator spoke in the open air, from a flag-bedecked stand, to the residents of the surrounding districts. Red fire and rockets heralded his approach, a Homecrest youngster circulated through the crowd selling peanuts and popcorn, and a fierce and deadly band came up in triumph on an ancient hay wagon and accomplished unprecedented miracles in the way of flats.

There were other orators, mostly local ones, though Kenneth Sutherland came over from Coney Island, and J. Grattan McMahon came down from Brooklyn. But interest centred in McCarren.

He took off his derby hat when Chairman John Moriarty introduced him in a flamboyant speech, and laid it on the impromptu table. The band flatted "Hail to the Chief," the crowd yelled enthusiastically, and McCarren stepped to the front and faced the delighted Homecresters.

He rested his hands on the rail before him and never changed his position, except once to put his hands in his pockets. He disdained all the usual flamboyance of stump speakers, and spoke in a direct, matter-of-fact way. He talked right along, seldom raising his tone, and speaking in a clear, pleasant voice. He was a change for people deadly weary of regulation stump speaking, and an agreeable one. Democrats may perhaps regret his announcement that he will stump no more.

Here are some of the things he said:

"The same issues that have been presented in every campaign since the beginning of this country's history are presented now—the issues between the Federalist party, which represented and represents the aristocracy or 'better element,' and the party which followed Thomas Jefferson, who stood for the principles of democracy. Those principles mean a government by the people as against government by classes or the selected few.

"We have presented a candidate who is by his training, his experience, and his character a natural exponent of these Democratic principles. He is a strict defender of the Constitution, and stands exactly for everything which is opposed to what the Republican candidate represents.

"We stand for the principles that should be accorded to every man under a strict construction of the Constitution, and we are opposed to the special privileges for which the Republican Party and its President stand.

"When President McKinley died, Vice President Roosevelt proclaimed that he would follow his policies. He would follow out the line of reciprocity and the line of good-will and peace with the rest of the world. He has in no wise followed the policy of the man whose place he took by reason of assassination.

"The policy which he is intent on following out will ultimately result in bringing about a condition which will necessitate the raising of the tariff and making the cost of living higher. There is a deficit in the Treasury instead of a surplus.

"If we compare conditions to-day with ten years ago, the increase in the cost of living is about 30 per cent. and the increase in wages 10 per cent.

"By reason of the fact that the Republican majority in Congress dares not oppose his will, he is riding rough shod toward a condition of imperialism and dictatorship that will result in one-man power in the American Government, unless it be checked.

"We find him riding over the statutes of the United States, ignoring precedents and disregarding Congress. He is not only a militant President, but a President who is willing to set aside every law of the United States to accomplish his purposes and maintain himself in power.

"No such spectacle has ever been presented as his wielding every power that belongs to the President to secure a renomination. On the other hand, the man we have nominated never lifted a finger, never raised his voice to bring about his nomination. He stood aloof from the turmoils of politics. The office sought him.

"We cannot continue our democratic form of government, we cannot have a government by the people, if we continue a system by which government is left to one man."

BULLET SHOWER IN STREET.

Tombs Court Doors Locked When Noise of Fight Was Heard.

Bullets flying free in a triangular street fight in Centre Street near White Street caused pandemonium in and around the Criminal Courts Building at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. Though the street was thronged, and though much of the firing was at close range, no one was hurt so far as the police learned. Eighteen shots were fired as the men ran from Harry Howard Square through Canal Street into Centre Street. As the reports rang out, coming nearer and nearer, they caused a panic in near-by structures, particularly in the Tombs Court, which was crowded and in which Magistrate Mayo was sitting.

There was a general rush for the doors, but the court officers slammed and locked them. The principals in the affray were Salvatore Santanella, an importer and Italian confectionery at 214 Canal Street; James De Fasse, his friend, and Alphonse Littita of 141 Macdougal Street, and a friend of his who dropped out of sight when the fighting became strenuous, after firing a single shot.

Detective Sergeant Hahn and Detective Rickards of the Elizabeth Street Station rushed out of the Criminal Courts Building and grabbed two of the fighters, De Fasse being seized by spectators. It took the police reserves from the court squad half an hour to clear the streets of the crowd. The prisoners were taken before Magistrate Mayo, who fined Santanella $10 and held the others in $500 bail for examination. Witnesses of the shooting said that the reason nobody was hurt was that the men shut their eyes at each shot and fired almost vertically into the air, meanwhile screaming foreign objurgations.

that treaties are faithfully observed; they will avert disputes; they will relieve the people of overwhelming burdens imposed by criminal whims.

"But in order to accomplish its duty, this institution must also be made the foundation of a political organization of the world. To that end, the contemplated conferences must be periodical, and, if I may here express a personal idea, they must, during the time intervening between general assemblies, have an organ vested with certain supervising, directing and executive powers. This will prove to be the first stage of an international political organization, similar to that which now exists in the United States and in my own country, Switzerland.

"The Interparliamentary Conference at St. Louis has deemed you, Mr. President, to be especially fitted to assume the initiative of a second general assembly of the States. We are aware that in applying to you, we address ourselves to an earnest defender of international justice, and we bear in mind that you were the first head of a Government who turned the Governments toward the permanent Court of Arbitration of The Hague."

Mr. Gobat expressed the hope that the President would comply with the wishes of the Interparliamentary Union, and that success would crown his initiative. After presenting the resolution Mr. Gobat said:

"I have discharged the official duty with which I was intrusted. I venture to assume another, and feel confident that my action will receive the approval of all the members of European parliaments.

"We thank you, Mr. President, from the depths of our hearts, for having been pleased to join in the friendly invitation extended to the Interparliamentary Union by the Congress of the United States, by sending us an invitation in the name of your Government and in your own.

"We express the most sincere wishes for the success of your political acts, for your happiness, and that of your family, for the happiness and prosperity of the United States, whose infinite horizon is equaled by nothing save the breadth of views and the spirit of independence of the descendants of Washington and Franklin."

President's Promises.

In response to Dr. Gobat's speech, President Roosevelt delivered the following address:

"Gentlemen of the Interparliamentary Union:

"I greet you with profound pleasure as representatives in a special sense of the great international movement for peace and good will among the nations of the earth.

"It is a matter of gratification to all Americans that we have had the honor of receiving you here as the Nation's guests. You are men skilled in the practical work of Government in your several countries, and this fact adds weight to your championship of the cause of international justice. I thank you for your kind allusions to what the Government of the United States has accomplished for the policies you have at heart, and I assure you that this Government's attitude will continue unchanged in reference thereto. We are even now taking steps to secure arbitration treaties with all other Governments which are willing to enter into them with us.

"In response to your resolutions, I shall at an early date ask the other nations to join in a second congress at The Hague. I feel, as I am sure you do, that our efforts should take the shape of pushing forward toward completion the work already begun at The Hague, and that whatever is now done should appear not as something divergent therefrom but as a continuance thereof.

"At the first conference at The Hague several questions were left unsettled, and it was expressly provided that there should be a second conference. A reasonable time has elapsed, and I feel that your body has shown sound judgment in concluding that a second conference should now be called to carry some steps further toward completion the work of the first.

"It would be visionary to expect too immediate success for the great cause you are championing, but very substantial progress can be made if we strive with resolution and good sense toward the goal of securing among the nations of the earth, as among individuals of each nation, a just sense of responsibility in each toward others, and a just recognition in each of the rights of others. The right and the responsibility must go hand in hand. Our effort must be unceasing both to secure in each nation full acknowledgment of the rights of others, and to bring about in each nation an ever-growing sense of its own responsibilities.

"At an early date I shall issue the call for the conference you request. I again greet you and bid you welcome in the name of the American people, and wish you godspeed in your efforts for the common good of mankind."

At the conclusion of the addresses the President and Mrs. Roosevelt personally received and exchanged greetings with each of the delegates and women present, the introductions being made by Col. Bromwell and Major McCauley. The reception was held in the Blue Room, the guests passing from there through the Red Room into the State dining room, where a buffet luncheon was served.

BENNETT ESTATE HERE SMALL.

Equity in New York Realty, $40,575—Personalty, $5,073.

According to the appraisement, most of the property in this State left by the late Henry M. Bennett is mortgaged to such an extent that the equity in various parcels which he was believed to own absolutely in New York amounts to only $40,575. The appraisement, which was filed yesterday in the Surrogate's office, gives the value of the net personal property in this State as $5,073. However, his real estate holdings in New Jersey and Pennsylvania were large.

Bennett died in Monmouth County, N. J., on April 1, 1902. After his death Laura Biggar, the actress, who had cared for him during his last illness, put in a claim for his entire estate, alleging that she was his widow.

In the appraisement the assertion is made that Bennett left debts in New Jersey and Pennsylvania amounting to $110,723, and that these exceeded his total personal estate by $31,298, which is made a charge against his New York real estate. The only property excepted is the house at 119 East Eighty-third Street, in which Laura Biggar has a life estate.

BRICKLAYERS AGAINST MERGER.

Turn Down Proposition to Unite Manhattan and Bronx Unions.

The proposition to consolidate the nine bricklayers' unions in Manhattan and the Bronx into one, two, or three unions was defeated last night by an overwhelming vote. The voting took place at the Murray Hill Lyceum, and was by ballot, beginning at 9 in the morning and lasting until after 9 at night.

This is the second vote on the proposition of consolidation. The first vote was taken six months ago, but the notice was too short, and was not considered decisive. The vote of last night is final, and settles the question for good.

EXTENSIVE TRAFFIC IN STAMPED CIGAR BOXES

Refilled with "Domestics," Says Trust, Which Are Sold as Cubans.

HEARING ON STAMP ORDER

We Smoke 25,000,000 Domestic Cigars as Imported, Says Lawyer—New Order Temporarily Suspended.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—H. A. Taylor, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, to-day gave a hearing to the representatives of the leading tobacco interests on the question of the proposed change in the customs stamp now required to be used on boxes of imported cigars. The independent tobacco interests advocate the removal of the stamp altogether or the placing of a smaller and less conspicuous stamp on the bottom of the box. This position is opposed by the American Tobacco Company, which is the largest manufacturer and importer of Havana cigars in the country, and other manufacturers of Havana.

Morris S. Wise of New York, representing the Havana Cigar Manufacturers' Association of the United States, opened the hearing and said, in answer to Secretary Taylor's inquiry, that the independent cigar manufacturers were satisfied with the design and general character of the stamp proposed to be used by Assistant Secretary Armstrong. Mr. Wise protested against being asked to open the case, inasmuch as the order for the change had already been issued by Assistant Secretary Armstrong, and he thought that it was the duty of the protestants against the change to open the argument.

Secretary Taylor said he had suspended the order issued by Mr. Armstrong, and that the case would be heard as if no change had been ordered.

Junius Parker counsel for the American Tobacco Company, New York, made the argument for the protestants against any change in the stamp now in use. Mr. Parker said that the old stamp has been in use ever since 1866 and with practically no objection to its form or appearance. In 1902, he said, the Havana Tobacco Company was organized and begun marketing its products in the United States, and found a deplorable situation.

Many well-known brands were being imitated so generally, Mr. Parker said, that the trademarks had come to be almost meaningless and valueless. The manufacturers of well-known domestic brands were here, and able to protect themselves, but the Havana manufacturers were not here, and dozens of Pennsylvania manufacturers were putting out cigars bearing the same names as those manufactured in Havana.

Empty boxes bearing the customs stamp, he continued, were a staple article of commerce in New York and other large cities, and their only use was to be refilled with domestic cigars. Those able to judge have said that 25,000,000 domestic cigars were consumed in the United States believed by their consumers to be of Cuban manufacture.

Assistant Secretary Armstrong said he would like to give the reasons why he had ordered the change in the stamp. He explained that the reasons for the original adoption of the present stamp no longer existed. The Government, he said, in recent legislation, had distinctly recognized the tobacco interest of the United States, and the stamp in present use operated in effect as a discrimination against the industry in the United States. He also spoke of the sale in New York of a large number of empty boxes bearing the import stamp with a view to their being used for domestic cigars. He cited this fact, among others, as a reason for the proposed change.

Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor and First Vice President of the Cigarmakers' International Union of America, said that the cigarmakers of the United States were entitled to a fair deal, and he did not think that if the American workmen made as good a cigar as could be made in Havana, which was a well-known fact, they would be discriminated against by the use of the present import stamp.

He did not think it fair, he said, to compel the American workman not only to meet the imported cigars on the question of real merit, but also to compel him to compete against the Government's certificate of actual or fancied excellence. If Mr. Armstrong's order is permitted to go into effect, Mr. Gompers said, the imported cigars would have to stand upon their merits as the American cigar does.

At the conclusion of the arguments Secretary Taylor took the matter under advisement, saying that he would render a decision without delay.

RESTRAINS MESSENGER BOYS.

Western Union Goes to Court at Dallas for Protection in Strike.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, Sept. 24.—The Western Union Telegraph Company went to court to-night to obtain protection from its striking messenger boys in this city.

Judge Nash of the Fourteenth District Civil Court at 11 o'clock issued an order restraining the strikers from interfering with the property or employes of the company. About thirty striking messengers are cited to appear before the Judge on Tuesday next.

MAY BE MORGAN'S RELATIVE.

Arrested for Speeding Auto Returning from Yonkers Races.

While returning from the automobile races at the Empire City track, Yonkers, yesterday Charles Morgan, twenty-two years old, who gave his address as the Hotel Regent, Broadway and Seventieth Street, was arrested in Jerome Avenue near One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Street on a charge of exceeding the speed limit with his automobile. With him at the time of the arrest were two women, who accompanied him to the station house.

According to Bicycle Policeman May of the Tremont Station, Morgan was speeding at about 25 miles an hour. At the station house he was told by the Sergeant that he would have to furnish a cash bail for $250. Mr. Morgan pulled a large roll of bills from his pocket, but did not have the necessary amount. He then left his machine and the party hired a carriage and drove away.

At the Hotel Regent last night it was said that there was a Charles Morgan living there, but that he was not at home. The Tremont Station desk Sergeant said the arrested man was a relative of J. Pierpont Morgan.

LAUNCH SEA-GOING DREDGE.

Caucus, Built by Reilly Company, for Florida Harbor Service.

The James Reilly Repair and Supply Company of New York launched the second of the two large sea-going suction dredges for the United States Government at the Greenport yard, Greenport, L. I., at noon yesterday. The vessel was christened the Caucus by Miss Anna M. Bowman, daughter of M. K. Bowman, manager of the Reilly Company.

The two vessels, which have been under construction for the past twelve months, are intended to remove the sand from the mouth of the St. John's River, Fla., and the harbor of Pensacola, Fla. These vessels are of the type which have sprung into use during the last few years to meet conditions where the ordinary apparatus would be entirely inadequate. They are 200 feet long, forty feet beam, and twenty-three feet two inches in depth, and are fitted with two large Scotch boilers of about 2,000 horse power.

Platt Appeals from Elias Decision.

Counsel for John R. Platt, who is suing Hannah Elias for $685,000, which he claims she extorted from him under threats, has appealed from Justice Blanchard's decision that Mrs. Elias should receive $500 a month for her support and maintenance and have the use of her house on Central Park West rent free. On the other hand, Mrs. Elias is not satisfied with Justice Blanchard's ruling, and she has appealed to the Appellate Division. She contends that the injunction is too extensive and too sweeping and that it should be dissolved for the reason that the decision is very much against her, although Platt's suit has not yet been decided.

Game Abundant in Maine.

AUGUSTA, Me., Sept. 24.—From all reports received at the office of the Fish and Game Commission from Wardens and guides, game seems to be exceedingly abundant for the opening of the season, one week from to-day, when it is legal to shoot deer. The reports indicate that there are more moose in Washington County this Fall than ever before.

THE BIG CELTIC IN WITH 3,318 ABOARD

Passenger List of 2,937 Said to be a Record Breaker.

DR. PARKHURST COMES BACK

Dr. Rainsford, Also Returning, Says English Church is Failing—Justice Leventritt Praises Herrick.

The White Star liner Celtic, in yesterday from Liverpool, landed 2,937 passengers, which is said to be the largest number ever landed at this port from an English vessel. The Celtic's complement of officers and men brought the total aboard up to 3,318. On Sept. 19 a lamp trimmer named Walker fell overboard and was lost.

One of the passengers was the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst. He was suffering from a severe cold on his arrival and declined to grant an interview. The doctor, however, asked a number of questions, especially concerning the political situation, which seemed greatly to interest him.

Another aboard the Celtic was the Rev. Dr. William S. Rainsford, rector of St. George's. Dr. Rainsford said that he had not been in England before for several years and that while he was there he had rested.

"I have been over in England since July," he said, "and in that time I have learned two things. England is far behind us in educational matters, and the Church in England is slowly losing ground. The English highest and best schools do not compare with our finest.

"As regards the church, I find it top systematized. The whole thing is one cast-iron system, and you cannot feed human beings on a system. The church has a mission on earth toward man, and if it does not fulfill that mission it is not a good church. I saw a number of people leaving before the sermon in several of the churches I visited. After hearing the sermon I wondered why they all did not leave before. Preaching has fallen down badly in England since I was there last.

"I did not find that the Christian church was being deserted for any fad, because one will find fewer faddists in that country than anywhere else on the earth. They would not even allow Dowie to remain in London. The people are simply drifting away."

Supreme Court Justice David Leventritt was also on the Celtic. Judge Leventritt said that he was well pleased with the Democratic ticket nominated at Saratoga.

"I do not know a man," he said, "who would better unite the party than Judge Herrick. He is a man of sterling character and can be trusted to perform the duties of the Governor's office with honor to himself and the State. As to Mr. Harrison, he is a young man, but his record is of the best, and he will win."

Ex-Corporation Counsel George L. Rives, who has been abroad with his family, also returned on the Celtic. Like Judge Leventritt, Mr. Rives expressed his confidence in a Democratic victory in this State and his regard for Judge Herrick.

Among the other passengers on the Celtic were Mr. and Mrs. Louis Adler, Viscount Bengham, Belgian Minister to Mexico; Bishop Joseph H. Johnson of Southern California, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur P. Howard, Mr. and Mrs. Crawford Hill, Mrs. John G. Holmes, Judge and Mrs. T. S. Maxey, Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Schoonmaker, Dr. and Mrs. F. E. Sondern, Mrs. R. M. Tattersall, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. White.

Doesn't it stand to reason that an apartment house with every apartment rented, must be better in some way than one only half rented?

ARMENIANS BEAR LETTER.

Want Us to Help Stop Massacres—Others on Big Liners.

The Cunarder Umbria and the American liner St. Paul, the former from Liverpool and the latter from Southampton, both reached port yesterday. Soon after the vessels arrived a report gained ground that the liners had raced across. This was denied. The Umbria beat the St. Paul to port by 2 hours and 55 minutes.

Clement A. Griscom, Jr., was one of the St. Paul's passengers. He said that he was out of the steamship business for good, and had no expectation of returning to it. Miss Sybil Carlyle, who is to support William Gillette in "The Admirable Crichton," also came over on the St. Paul. She said that rehearsals would begin Monday.

Others on the St. Paul were Lieut. Commander F. H. Bailey, United States Navy; William R. Bigham, United States Consul at Cape Town; Mrs. F. Coudert, Jefferson M. Levy, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Newhouse, J. H. Thierot, United States Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon; Mr. and Mrs. Orme Wilson, and Capt. and Mrs. Lars Anderson.

On the Umbria was G. B. Hunter of the shipbuilding firm of Swan, Hunter & Wigham Richardson, Limited, of Wallsend, England, one of the largest shipbuilding firms in the world. Mr. Hunter is going to the St. Louis Exposition to look over, in particular, the exhibitions in machinery and steel construction. On his return to the Atlantic seaboard he will look through some of our ship yards.

He said yesterday that the fast turbine steamship which his firm was building for the Cunard Line was now well under way. It will be the biggest ship afloat and will have a speed of 25 knots. In discussing steel construction, Mr. Hunter said that one of the reasons why a ship cost so much more in this country than in England was the high price of steel. "American steel is too high," he said. "It's quality is all right, but it is no better than English steel. We do not use it simply because of its high price."

Also on the Umbria was a party of Armenians, headed by Dr. Jean Louis Meilkow. They bear a letter from the Patriarch of the Armenian Church to President Roosevelt, asking him to co-operate with the other friendly powers in stopping the Armenian massacres.

Federation of Labor Meets Nov. 14.

A call has been sent out to the subordinate locals in New York and other cities by Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, for the twenty-fourth annual convention of the federation, to begin at San Francisco on Monday, Nov. 14. This convention is expected to be most largely attended of any for many years, and a number of new propositions are to be discussed.

MOTHER BURNED SAVING BABE.

Clutched Infant to Her Body When Bedding Caught Fire.

UNION HILL, N. J., Sept. 24.—Mrs. Pauline Janovitch was badly burned about the face and hands to-day at her home, at 146 Ferry Road, Gutenberg, and her husband and Mrs. Mary Blazek were burned in like manner while trying to save Mrs. Janovitch and her one-day-old baby.

Mrs. Janovitch and the baby were in bed, when the bed clothing accidentally was set on fire. Mrs. Janovitch managed to get out of bed with the infant, and her husband and Mrs. Blazek ran to her assistance, but she got away from them and rushed out of the house into the street, clasping the baby in her arms. Although her own face and hands were severely burned, she protected the child, which was unharmed.

She was taken into the house of a neighbor, and a doctor was summoned, who said that she would recover.

McNALLY CLUES FUTILE.

Brooklyn Police as Puzzled as Ever Over Saloon Keeper's Murder.

The Brooklyn police seemed to be still groping in the dark last night in their hunt for the murderer of Frank McNally, the Park Avenue saloon keeper, who was shot to death in his bed on Wednesday morning. The police put in another day running down clues which failed to pan out. The several mysterious women-in-black clues were put away on the shelf, and last night the bottom dropped out of the "veiled lady in a hansom who used to visit the saloon" clue.

This last clue had received much attention from the detectives. Last evening, however, Toma Hanlon, the actress, who was engaged to marry McNally, frankly told the police that she had frequently gone to the saloon in a hansom cab to visit him. She said that she had sometimes left the cab a block from the saloon and walked to the place.

McNally's saloon was reopened for business last night by his brother, Owen McNally. A lot of morbidly curious people visited the place. Efforts were made to open McNally's safe, in the expectation that something might be found in it to throw some light on the identity of the murderer, but the combination could not be worked. An expert safe opener will probably be put at work on it to-morrow.

GEN. ORLOFF WILL BE SENT BACK TO RUSSIA

Kuropatkin to Punish Him for Mistake at Liao-Yang.

STAKELBERG IS EXONERATED

Rumor That Grippenberg, Instead of Linevitch, Will Command the Second Manchurian Army.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 24.—Major Gen. Orloff, whose precipitancy in leaving Yen-Tai to join in the attack on the heights of Sy-kwan-Tun exposed Gen. Kuropatkin's left flank and necessitated the abandonment of Liao-Yang, will be detached from the Manchurian Army and given another command in European Russia, or perhaps he may be retired.

The detachment of Gen. Orloff was ordered by Gen. Kuropatkin, who has full power to do so without resorting to a court-martial.

The official report that Brig. Gen. Fomin of Gen. Orloff's division was dead, and the subsequent development that he is only severely wounded, reveals the extent of confusion into which Orloff's division was thrown. Gen. Fomin is in the hospital at Harbin.

The rumor that Gen. Stakelberg was included in the disgrace of Gen. Orloff is not true. Gen. Kuropatkin amended his original report in which he criticised Gen. Stakelberg, and now exonerates the latter from all blame for the reverse at Yen-Tai, adding that Gen. Stakelberg displayed the greatest bravery.

It is rumored that Gen. Grippenberg, commanding the troops at Vilna, has been selected to command the second Manchurian army in place of Lieut. Gen. Linevitch.

Gen. Kuropatkin has just presented colors to the Ninth Siberian Division, commanded by Gen. Kondratsvitch, which was formed just before the war. There was no time previously to prepare colors for this division, which fought bravely at Wafan-gow without them.

MAY BE OVERTURE TO FRANCE.

Vatican Sends Courier Paris with Important Documents.

ROME, Sept. 24.—The Vatican has sent to Paris a special courier with important documents, reported to concern possible negotiations for a Franco-Vatican rapprochement, which, although very difficult to arrange, is not considered impossible.

According to information received by the Holy See, President Loubet, Foreign Minister Delcassé, Minister of Public Instruction Chaumie, Minister of Finance Rouvier, and Minister of Public Works Maruejouls are in favor of such an understanding.

BREAKS TRUCE WITH REBELS.

Uruguayan Troops Try to Capture Them —Big Battle Imminent.

BUENOS AYRES, Sept. 24.—The Uruguayan Government rejected a portion of the revolutionary amendments to the peace conditions, and the Government forces surrounded the revolutionists, who, with Gen. Munoz and other leaders, narrowly escaped capture. A desperate fight is imminent.

The revolutionists are protesting against the Government's action in breaking the truce at a moment when the peace conferences were proceeding.

PROF. NIELS FINSEN DEAD.

Discoverer of Light Rays, Which Bear His Name, for Cure of Lupus.

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 24.—Prof. Niels Finsen, discoverer of the so-called Finsen rays of light for the cure of lupus and head of the Finsen Ray Institute here, where there is a large number of American and British patients, is dead.

Prof. Finsen, who was a comparatively young man, had been ill for some time past. In December, 1903, he received the Nobel Medical Prize from the Norwegian Parliament. King Edward and Queen Alexandra visited the Finsen Institute in April last, accompanied by Sir Francis Laking, his Majesty's Physician in Ordinary, who was ordered to study the improvements made at the Finsen Institute and to apply them to the Ray Institute in London. Their Majesties afterward visited Prof. Finsen.

MIRSKY PRAISES THE PRESS.

New Russian Minister of the Interior Expresses Liberal Views.

VILNA, Russia, Sept. 24.—Prince Sviatopolk-Mirsky, formerly Governor General of Vilna, and now Minister of the Interior, in a speech which he made here to-day to representatives of the press, laid stress upon the great importance of newspapers, especially those of the provinces.

The Prince said he had always been of the opinion that the press by loyally serving the true needs of the people was extremely useful and rendered great support to the Government. In conclusion Prince Sviatopolk-Mirsky said:

"I have always been a friend of the provincial press when in an open, upright, well-disposed manner it voiced the nation's needs, and I shall also remain its friend in the future."

FOR JAPAN'S PRISON SYSTEM.

Tokio Official Here Seeking Points for Improvements.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Sept. 24.—O. Inpami, Prison Bureau Inspector in the Department of Justice of Japan, and Secretary of the Prison Society of Japan, visited the Matteawan State Hospital to-day on a tour of inspection. Mr. Innami is a resident of Tokio, where one of the largest penitentiaries in Japan was recently erected.

Mr. Innami, through the Japanese Department of the Interior, is commissioned by his Government to visit this country and Europe, to investigate modern methods of providing for criminals of all ages, and also of caring for the criminal insane. He said his Government no doubt would follow the lines established by New York State in caring for criminal insane.

CZAR'S UNENTERPRISING NAVY.

Russian Admiral Urges Sweeping Reforms in the Admiralty.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 24.—An Admiral writes to The Novoe Vremya bewailing the lack of enterprise and determination in the management of the Russian navy, to which he ascribes the failures of the squadrons in the Far East in their operations, and of the auxiliary cruisers recently commissioned to stop contraband of war.

He insists on the necessity for sweeping reforms in the Admiralty, and the introduction of up-to-date methods in shipbuilding.

Want Zola Entombed in Pantheon.

PARIS, Sept. 24.—A movement has been started to have the body of Emile Zola placed in the Pantheon. The movement will take more definite form Oct. 2, the anniversary of his death, when a demonstration will be made at his tomb in the Cemetary of Montmartre.

ITALIAN DISCUSSES TRUSTS.

Brunialti Speaks to Section of Congress of Arts and Sciences.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 24.—The principal speaker at the meeting of the section on Constitutional Law of the Congress of Arts and Science to-day was Señor Attillio Brunialti, Councillor of State, Rome, Italy. He said in part:

"The problems of constitutional law are liberty, justice, and the welfare of human beings. There are only two ways to reform constitutional law, the way embodied in the United States Constitution and that followed by England and Italy." The speaker then, in an analysis of Federal power, said:

"Some find such a development of authority not without serious danger. The trusts are classed in this category.

"Apparently the trusts are reducing production to unity, but in reality they are multiplying it indefinitely.

"Speaking of the Socialistic phase of the situation, it is an exaggeration to say that some time there will be a bloody Socialist revolution.

"Remember that, although President Roosevelt gave to New York State the 'business company act,' and later created the Department of Commerce, with a Cabinet officer at its head, thus putting aside the trial of an always extremely difficult reform of the Federal Constitution, the battle still continues in the courts of justice, which, armed with the Sherman Anti-Trust law, are striking inexorably.

"The American plutocracy will not be mightier than that of Cæsar or Napoleon, if it will pretend to check the laws of nature, or to change the course of history."

ITALIAN RAILWAY STRIKE.

Deputies Want Parliament Convoked to Consider General Situation.

NAPLES, Sept. 24.—Though there had been a cessation of the general strike in Italy a strike of 2,356 engine drivers and stokers against their chief engineer is still on. At first it was considered to be of little importance, but it now seems that it may spread to a serious extent. Some railway trains have been forced to cease running because of a lack of engine drivers.

ROME, Sept. 24.—A committee of the Extreme Left, representing Socialist, Republican, and Radical Members of the Chamber of Deputies, to-day presented to the President of the body a petition asking that Parliament be convoked for the purpose of discussing the policy pursued by the Government in connection with the general strike.

The President of the Chamber replied to the petition that he was not authorized to reconvoke Parliament, but that he would pass the request of the committee to the executive authorities. It is generally believed that the request will not be granted, but that Parliament will be reopened, as customary, at the end of November.

SUICIDE WAS ON HONEYMOON.

G. A. Davis, Dead in London, Said to Have Been Worried Over Money.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—George A. Davis, said to be the son of a wealthy ranch owner of Kansas, who was found dead in bed in a London hotel yesterday morning, with an artery of his left arm cut, registered as from Boston, Mass., when he first arrived in London, about two weeks ago.

This evening the manager of the hotel showed the original register, with the signature and address in Davis's handwriting. It was given out that his father lived in Kansas City, because the cable dispatch received here from him concerning the disposition of the body was dated Kansas City.

The wife of the deceased left the hotel early yesterday with a friend, whose address has not been made public.

It is understood at the hotel that Davis was here on his honeymoon, but that lately he had been worried over his finances.

TOPEKA, Kan., Sept. 24.—It is stated here to-day that the George Davis who committed suicide in London Friday is the son of E. H. Davis, a large ranch owner of Norwich, Kan. E. H. Davis was formerly manager of the Refrigerator Line of the Santa Fé Railroad, and it is said in Santa Fé circles that the suicide was his son.

BELGIAN VISITOR FOUND DEAD.

Clerk of House of Deputies Expires Suddenly in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—Hector Van Doorslaer, Clerk of the Belgian House of Deputies, and one of the members of the Interparliamentary Union now visiting this country, died suddenly last night at the Arlington Hotel.

Mr. Van Doorslaer was a guest of the Belgian Minister at dinner last night, returning to the Arlington Hotel at a late hour. He seemed to be in excellent health when he reached the hotel, and he retired soon afterward to his room.

Not responding this morning to a call, the door of his room was forced, and he was found dead in bed. The indications were that he died soon after he had retired, probably of heart disease. It is likely that his body will be taken to Belgium for interment, although no arrangements for the funeral have yet been made.

MEDICAL EXPERTS COMING.

Accept Invitation to Investigate Spread of Pneumonia Here.

Health Commissioner Darlington has received acceptance from the physicians whom he invited to meet in New York for the purpose of considering as experts the alarming increase of pneumonia and determining if possible whether it is contagious and to devise a plan for dealing with the disease. He will soon announce the date for assembling the commission.

The last letter of acceptance was received yesterday. When the commission is called to order its roster will include Dr. Frank Billings of Chicago, Dr. Theobald Smith of Harvard, Dr. J. H. Muzzer of Philadelphia, President of the American Medical Association; Dr. William Osler, who was called from the Johns Hopkins University to Cambridge; Dr. William H. Welsh of the Johns Hopkins University, and Drs. E. G. Janeway, T. Mitchell Prudden, and Emmett Holt of New York City.

If it is agreed that pneumonia is contagious it is probable that premises in which the disease occurs will be handled by the health authorities just as are houses in which there appear diseases of the types now accepted as contagious. Disinfection and perhaps fumigation under the supervision of the Department of Health will follow.

FRENCH WIRELESS STATION.

Government to Install One at Westernmost Point of France.

PARIS, Sept. 24.—The Government is about to install the first French wireless telegraph station on an island off the westernmost point of France. This will be used to communicate with incoming and outgoing transatlantic steamers.

The War Department is also extending the use of wireless telegraphy. Experiments made at the Eiffel Tower during the past week permitted the army officials here to carry on wireless communication with Dijon, 200 miles distant.

Jose Pardo Is President of Peru.

LIMA, Peru, Sept. 24.—José Pardo, who was elected in June, assumed the Presidency of Peru to-day amid great festivities.

RUSSIA ROUSED OVER ANGLO-TIBETAN TREATY

Demands Modification of One of Its Articles.

MAY MAKE STRONG PROTEST

Section Objected To Practically Substitutes British Authority for That of China, It Is Said.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 25.—Foreign Minister Count Lamsdorff has, it is announced, wired instructions to Count Benckendorff, the Russian Ambassador to Great Britain, to confer with Foreign Secretary Lord Lansdowne with a view of securing a modification of the Anglo-Tibetan treaty, which has not yet been ratified by China.

Count Benckendorff is authorized by these instructions to lodge a strong protest if Great Britain refuses to consider Russia's objections to the treaty, which, it is understood, refer exclusively to Article IX. of the draft of the convention.

PARIS, Sept. 24.—Information reaching the highest quarters here indicates that Russia will probably request Great Britain for a protocol defining the British intentions in Tibet.

It is confirmed that Russia and Great Britain had a written understanding relative to the British expedition to Tibet. It was at first supposed that the recent British-Tibetan treaty carried out this understanding, but the publication of the text of the treaty leads to the belief in official Russian quarters that Great Britain seeks a political foothold beyond the terms of the understanding. Therefore representations have been made with the view of securing a protocol exactly defining and limiting the British sphere.

This is expected to be accomplished by an amicable exchange of notes, not involving a renewal of the Anglo-Russian tension.

Article IX. of the Anglo-Tibetan treaty, according to a dispatch from St. Petersburg Sept. 22, is so sweeping as to make British authority in Tibet practically displace that of China. Great Britain, the dispatch said, claims that the Chumbi Valley is not really part of Tibet, though subject to its jurisdiction, and that she has no intention to hold it permanently.

PORT ARTHUR GETS SUPPLIES.

Story of Great General Assault Denied in St. Petersburg.

CHE-FOO, Sept. 24.—The steamer Victoria, which arrived here this evening from Niu-Chwang, heard two hours' heavy firing at Port Arthur this morning, the firing being on the east side of the city. The steamer was twice stopped by Japanese warships.

A Japanese who has arrived here from Dalny says that the battle which began at Port Arthur Sept. 19 continued during Sept. 20, but he is unable to give any details of the fighting. On the 21st and 22d the bombardment was slight.

The bombardment of Sept. 19 began at 3 o'clock in the morning and lasted one hour. At dawn the volume of firing increased to an extent hitherto unknown. Some of the heavy guns which have lately been placed opened fire from a quarter which has previously been silent. During the fiercest firing the heavy guns were fired at an average of twice in one minute. Every window in Dalny shook. Thereafter it was inconsequential.

Chinese from a village near Port Arthur confirm the foregoing, and add while off the Miaotao Islands yesterday they heard firing from 10 o'clock in the morning until 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

TSING-TAU, Sept. 24.—The German steamer Erica, to which the British collier transferred her cargo of Cardiff coal, cleared for Victoria, B. C., yesterday. The chief engineer of the Erica refused to sail on the vessel, alleging that she was going to attempt to run the blockade at Port Arthur.

Russians here say that several supply ships have arrived at Port Arthur recently with foodstuffs, ammunition, and medicines. It is affirmed that there are 15,000 sick and wounded there.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 24.—There is no truth in the story published by the Matin of Paris to the effect that telegrams reached the Emperor at 4 o'clock this morning announcing that the Japanese were engaged in a general assault on Port Arthur.

The story apparently was based on gossip of the town growing out of the continued absence of the messages which Lieut. Radziwill, on his recent arrival at Che-Foo from Port Arthur, announced that he had been charged to forward. The delay probably is due to the difficulty experienced by Radziwill in reaching Mukden.

The report of the arrival of several shiploads of provisions, medicine, and ammunition at Port Arthur is causing the liveliest satisfaction here and strengthens the conviction that the fortress can hold out.

The ability of vessels to enter Port Arthur is taken to indicate that the Japanese blockade is by no means so effective as in the earlier stages of the siege.

The capture of a vessel coming out of the harbor after having delivered her cargo is believed to be contrary to international law and likely to lead to protest.

RUSSIAN SHIPS AT PORT SAID.

Captains of the Petersburg and Smolensk Visit British Cruiser.

PORT SAID, Sept. 24.—The Russian auxiliary cruisers Petersburg and Smolensk are here awaiting permission to take coal and provisions enough on board to carry them to Bizerta, Tunis.

They asked for sufficient supplies to enable them to reach Libau, but their request was refused, and they must proceed within twenty-four hours.

This afternoon the Captains of the Russian vessels exchanged visits with the officers of the British cruiser Furious. The Furious is under orders to be in readiness to sail at two hours' notice. Her destination is not known.

LABOR PENSIONS IN FRANCE.

Government Scheme to Provide Them Without Increasing Taxes.

PARIS, Sept. 24.—Among the important matters coming up when Parliament reassembles is a financial scheme whereby it is proposed to provide the funds necessary for founding workmen's pensions without resorting to fresh taxation.

The basis of the scheme, which, it is understood, Finance Minister Rouvier fully approves, is refunding a portion of the public debt by the issuance of two and one-quarter per cent. bonds. This would have the effect of saving $60,000,000 in interest yearly, of which a portion would be used to establish labor pensions.

German Navy's Personnel Increased.

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—The naval budget for 1905 contains estimates for the increase of the personnel to 40,000 officers and men.

WIFE HIS SISTER OF MERCY.

Arrived Just in Time to Tend Dying Gen. Martson at Liao-Yang.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 24.—A pathetic echo of the battle of Liao-Yang is related by a Russian correspondent.

Gen. Martson and Col. von Raaben were mortally wounded by shrapnel bursting in a Chinese hut in which they were sitting. Martson's young and beautiful wife, who had volunteered as a Sister of Mercy, had just arrived at Liao-Yang. By the strange irony of fate she was sent out to attend her dying husband.

Martson lived for hours, suffering terrible agony. His whole body was torn by the shrapnel. His wife, who never left his side, followed her husband to the grave. The sight moved hardened veterans to tears.

CZAR HONORS POLISH NOBLES.

Leading Poles at Unveiling of Catherine the Great's Monument.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 24.—The Emperor has conferred numerous distinctions on representative Polish nobles who have co-operated with the administration of Prince Peter Sviatopolk-Mirsky while Governor General of Vilna.

VILNA, Sept. 24.—Over sixty members of leading Polish families attended the ceremonies yesterday of the unveiling of the monument to Catherine the Great. This is the more remarkable in view of the fact that Catherine struck the final blow at the Kingdom of Poland. The presence of the Poles is regarded as a memorable event in the reconciliation of the Poles and Russians.

RANSOMS AT BARGAIN RATES.

Now Marked Down to $145 Per Captive by Moroccan Tribes.

TANGIER, Morocco, Sept. 24.—Mr. Lee, the British merchant of Rabat who was captured by tribesmen while fishing in the Rabat River, and who subsequently returned safely to Rabat, only secured his freedom after paying a ransom of $145.

PARIS, Sept. 24.—The Foreign Office has received a report from Tangier showing that the settlement of the case of Mr. Lee was much similar to that of Ion Perdicaris, the American citizen who was kidnapped by the bandit Rais Uli. Mr. Lee, who is a British subject, was, according to the official report received here, captured by bandits, and France exercised her good offices, leading to the acceptance of a nominal ransom, $145.

The reports show that French control of the police at Tangier is greatly improving the conditions there.

Cheap Steerage Rates from Hungary.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAIN, Sept. 24.—It is reported on good authority that the shipping conference to-day decided on a $10 reduction in the steerage rates from Hungary to the United States.

Italian Territory Invaded at Atlantic City, Says Ambassador.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 24.—The attention of the State Department at Washington has been officially called to the invasion of the Summer domicile here of Baron Mayor des Planches, Italian Ambassador to the United States. Returning to the city two weeks ago after a brief trip to Newport, Baron des Planches found the Pacific Avenue cottage, which he had rented till Sept. 19, in possession of Mrs. Josephine Cadmus of New York, who had bought the premises and moved in, supposing his tenancy had been terminated.

Secretary Señor Ricardo Borghetti of the Italian Embassy to-day caused the arrest of Daniel Collins, a broker, who gave the new owner possession of what is described as Italian territory. A letter from First Assistant Secretary of State Adee to Mayor Stoy advising him that the invasion of the Des Planches domicile had been technically an invasion of Italian territory, was presented as evidence for prosecution. Lawyer John Read, for the defense, pleaded there had been no intent to fracture either diplomatic or other laws.

Justice Donnelly ordered an adjournment for two weeks.

CAR DIDN'T KILL HER.

Unexpected Happened to Lucky Rosie Strehle in Broadway.

Little nine-year-old Rosie Strehle of 415 West Fortieth Street, paying no heed to the cries of an older sister, ran directly in front of a south-bound Broadway car at Thirty-ninth Street last night. The motorman by sheer strength braked the car so that, although it struck her, it did not run over her.

When Rosie was picked up a hurried examination showed that she had escaped with a bloody nose. Her sister wouldn't let her go to the hospital. Then, with the Broadway crowd admiring her luck, the girl went home.

PLAN WELCOME FOR VAN WYCK.

Friends of ex-Mayor Robert A. Van Wyck have planned a big dinner and reception in his honor at the Democratic Club next Thursday evening. The ex-Mayor is expected to return from his European trip on Wednesday on the steamship Baltic.

The dinner and reception are planned to be a sort of reunion of the "Croker Old Guard" in the local Democratic ranks. While in England Mr. Van Wyck saw Mr. Croker several times, and it is supposed he is bringing home some word of cheer for the close personal following of the old leader, a following which has been out of favor since the Murphy régime. Frank Croker is Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements for the dinner.

Charles F. Murphy has been invited, but as yet has not replied to the invitation.

ATTEMPT TO WRECK EXPRESS.

Engineer Saw 300-Pound Boulder on Track Near Ogdensburg.

OGDENSBURG, N. Y., Sept. 24.—An attempt was made to wreck an express train on the Brockville, Westport and Northern Railroad, on the Canadian side, twelve miles west from here, by wedging a boulder weighing 300 pounds against the rail near an embankment.

The engineer discovered the obstruction and succeeded in stopping the train.

JAPAN'S DIFFICULTIES IN FINANCING THE WAR

First Provided for Twelve Months' Hostilities.

MANY UNCERTAIN FACTORS

No Way of Telling How Long Fight Would Last and Rice Crop Outlook Was Uncertain.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—The London Times publishes from a correspondent a letter on Japanese war finance, which says:

The message of congratulation which the Mikado addressed to his victorious army after the battle of Liao-Yang shattered the hope of the business community that the unhappy state of war in the Far East might soon be terminated. The reassertion of the preparedness of Japan to carry the campaign on to the goal which her rulers have set themselves may not improbably be intended as a reminder to her adversary that no peace proposals will be entertained at Tokio which fall short of the conditions which Japan sought in vain to secure by diplomatic means until the first week of February last. There is yet a possibility, however remote, that the peace party at St. Petersburg may succeed in convincing the Czar and his advisers that nothing can be gained by the prosecution of a war for which the Russian sea and land forces have proved so ill-prepared. But if the campaign should be prolonged throughout the Manchurian Winter or only interrupted in order to be prosecuted with renewed vigor in the Spring, the importance of this decision on the part of Russia from the point of view of international financial circles cannot be overrated. The war, if continued, will constitute an increasingly disturbing factor in the world's trade, finance, and especially in the international money market.

At the outset the question presents itself, and has an important bearing on the means adopted for financing the war, what duration the Japanese Government had taken into account when it submitted the war budget to the special session of the Diet in March last. The war expenditure authorized by that Assembly amounted to 576,000,000 yen, but as 156,000,000 yen of this total had been authorized by an urgency ordinance of the Mikado on Dec. 28 last, and partly expended on preparations before the outbreak of hostilities, it may be safe to estimate the proposed expenditure after Feb. 8 at no more than 500,000,000 yen, or about £50,000,000, which, taking the war expenditure at nearly £1,000,000 per week, would provide for twelve months' hostilities.

It was advisable, if perhaps not essential, to provide out of this total for the foreign debt service for the same period; the loans in existence at the time of the war budget (March, 1904,) required a sum of about 10,000,000 yen per annum. To this had to be added the interest on the new war loan, which before the end of the first year of the war will only have required about £150,000, being 6 per cent. interest due on Oct. 5, reckoned from the dates of the various installments of the £10,000,000 loan. Roughly calculated, Japan had therefore to transfer to, or maintain in, Europe a sum of about £1,150,000 for the interest due to her foreign bondholders, of which only the £150,000 belongs to the province of war finance proper. But the funds at the disposal of Japan abroad—for which, as I have briefly explained, London is the most natural "depository"—had to be augmented very largely owing to the necessity of importing supplies and war material from Europe, America, as well as British and French India, Burma, and Siam.

The cost of foreign produce was only one uncertain factor in any calculation, but still more variable was the outlook for the Japanese rice crop in 1904, which, if it had been again unfavorable, would have entailed the continuance of the recent large rice imports from India and the Malay Peninsula, and would therefore have led to much larger payments abroad than could be possibly foreseen.

It is evident that the possibility of the recurrence of either of these circumstances—unjustifiably high prices in Japan or a poor crop—had to be taken into account in providing for the prospective imports by Japanese Army contractors, but, fortunately, the outlook for 1904, from the point of view of the reduction of the unfavorable balance of trade, is now materially improved. The price of rice in Japan is once more receding to a more normal figure, due to the excellent result of this year's crop, which amounts to 48,750,000 keku, a larger total than was recorded in any year since 1894, when the first complete agricultural statistics were compiled.

The influence of the rice imports on the amount of money to be paid by the Government for war supplies being evident, it only remains, in connection with these payments, to allude to the purchase of other war material in foreign countries. Accurate statistics on this point are, of course, not available, as it would not be advisable to indicate the sources of supply. But as the foreign trade returns include all purchases by the Government—duty being paid on all scheduled goods, excepting warships, guns, and ammunition, in order to place the private importer at no disadvantage compared with the Government departments—at least the imports of coal since the commencement of the war can be analyzed. These imports are largely intended to replenish the stores of the Japanese Navy, which in two years, 1900 and 1901, began purchasing Welsh smokeless coal to the value of about 4,200,000 yen, but raised its purchases during the first six months of the current year to 7,511,449 yen, against only 777,977 yen during the corresponding period of last year. "Other imports," which include canned goods from the United States, have also increased by about 4,000,000 yen, but no returns are obtainable as to the value of imports of ammunition and similar supplies, the only purchase in this category which has become generally known being that of the two Argentine cruisers now called Kasuga and Nisshin.

It follows from the extraordinary nature of the imports of Japan since Jan. 1 last that the amount of the funds at the disposal of the Japanese financial agents abroad, principally in London and the United States, and to a smaller extent at the ports where the Indian rice shipments were financed, had to be raised far beyond the ordinary limits. In order to accomplish these transfers it was of course in the first place necessary to increase the resources of the Department of Finance at Tokio, on which the domestic war expenditure was already making large inroads. The war budget sanctioned by the Japanese Diet in March last provided for the increase of the land tax, business tax, income tax, saké tax, sugar excise, soy tax, bourse tax, shooting licenses, and mining tax, while, customs duties and the co-called "consumption tax" on woolen textiles and kerosene oil were also raised all (with the exception of certain customs duties which are subject to the notice required by the various commercial treaties) being enforced on and after April 1, 1904, and to be abolished at the end of the year following the conclusion of peace.

The opportunity for another method of adding to the funds at the disposal of Japan in London arose in connection with the adverse trade balance between Japan and the United States. The silk exports to North America failed to balance Japanese purchases of war supplies in the United States, whence, moreover, were shipped large quantities of Mexican dollars to Japan, thus creating a large Japanese debit, which, in the absence of sufficient commercial paper, and owing to the consequent rise in the American rate of exchange at Yokohama, could only be liquidated by Japanese gold exports to San Francisco. There is reason to believe that the exchange arbitrage transactions leading to these gold shipments were largely, if not exclusively, carried through by London bankers. They continued beyond the date of issue of the American portion of the Japanese war loan, which might have been expected to check these bullion movements, as it should have constituted an "invisible import" to the value of nearly £5,000,000 from Japan and effected a corresponding reduction in the adverse American trade balance of that country. But as usual in the case of foreign loans subscribed in the United States, the Japanese war bonds found only a temporary home with the transatlantic subscribers. The substantial premium which was quoted in London from the date of the issue, and which tended to rise as the fortune of war continued to favor the Japanese arms, proved too strong a temptation for American holders, and already before the two final installments of 25 and 23½ per cent. respectively had fallen due in July and August last, a very large proportion of the American portion of the loan of the nominal value of £5,000,000 had found its way to the London market. London had, therefore, to provide the funds for the final installments on the bonds thus transferred to increase the total held by British investors beyond the original one-half of the issue. These sales of stock reduced, of course, the value of the invisible imports of the United States from Japan, and accordingly emphasized the need for gold shipments to San Francisco.

QUIET IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Gen. Wood's Fight with Moros Only Recent Affair of Note.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—Careful examination of the official reports made to the War Department by the commanding General of the Division of the Philippines, covering a period from last February down to the middle of August, fails to disclose any account of an engagement of importance between the American troops and the Moros with the single exception of an affair that occurred on the Island of Cagayen about six weeks ago.

The island is peopled by Moros of pronounced Malay type, and, according to Gen. Wood, as they are about 200 miles removed from the nearest island of the archipelago, and have never fully admitted allegiance to any power, they are difficult to control.

About the time mentioned a party of customs officers attempted to land on the island and establish a Custom House, but they were driven off by the Moros. Upon the facts being reported to Gen. Wood he dispatched two companies of soldiers to Cagayen from the Island of Mindanao. The soldiers were attacked by a considerable force of Moros, and in the engagement that ensued twenty-six of the Moros were killed. This had the effect of establishing peace on the island and the recognition of civil government.

It is reported that a force of soldiers is continually on the lookout for and in pursuit of Datto Ali. This Moro chieftain is held to have been guilty of gross treachery, involving the murder of American soldiers in violation of all rules of war.

FOR INTER-BRITISH TRADE.

Sir Howard Vincent Favors It—Canada Doesn't Want U. S. Reciprocity.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 24.—Sir Howard Vincent was entertained at luncheon to-day by the Canadian Club. Both Sir Howard and Sydney Fisher, the Minister of Agriculture, spoke strongly in favor of the promotion of trade within the British Empire.

Canada, said the Minister of Agriculture, was becoming every day more and more commercially independent of the United States. Speaker A. N. Belcourt of the Canadian House of Commons said that to-day not 5 per cent. of the people of Canada were in favor of making a reciprocity arrangement with the United States.

PHILIPPINE FRIARS' MONEY.

Augustinians to be Paid in London Instead of in Manila.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—Arrangements have just been made whereby the Augustinian friars in the Philippines can secure the money in payment for their lands in London, as they desire, instead of in Manila. To this end the insular bureau of the War Department has decided that the entire transaction shall be conducted through the Guarantee Trust Company of New York and London, and recourse will not be had to the Bank of England as originally contemplated.

The Treasurer of the Philippine Government has been instructed to draw forty warrants covering the $2,000,000 involved in this payment and hand them to the friars' representatives, who may cash them in London at their pleasure upon presentation to the Guarantee Trust Company there.

AMERICA'S FINE POSTAL SYSTEM.

Assistant Postmaster General Says It Excels in Many Respects.

PARIS, Sept. 24.—First Assistant Postmaster General Wynne, who sailed for New York from Cherbourg on the American Line steamer Philadelphia to-day, has been making observations of the postal systems of London and Paris, with the view of comparison with and application to the systems of New York and other American cities if advisable.

He says the American collection and delivery of mail are fully equal to and in many respects superior to those of European cities.

OPENING GAMES IN COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Columbia Defeats Union on Local Grounds by Low Score.

HOME ELEVEN IN POOR FORM

State College Holds Pennsylvania to a Single Touch-Down—Results of Other Contests.

The college football season of 1904 opened yesterday with games upon a dozen fields. At the American League Park in this city Columbia won from Union by the surprisingly low score of 10 to 0. At Philadelphia Pennsylvania State College held the University of Pennsylvania down to 6 to 0, Dickinson defeated Western Maryland 10 to 0, Lafayette rolled up a score of 35 to 0 against Wyoming Seminary at Easton, and Lehigh won from Albright 37 to 0 at Bethlehem. At Lewiston Bates won from the New Hampshire State College 6 to 0, and at Brunswick Bowdoin defeated the Fort Preble soldier team by 23 to 0.

Although the opening match of the season is considered little more than a practice game by most of the college football teams, yet it is relied upon to give the first line upon the strength of the teams, and from this point of view the results of yesterday's matches must bring disappointment to the adherents of Columbia, who had expected a much better showing to be made by the Morningside players.

The first week of football practice at Princeton was attended with encouraging results, and the prospects for a strong team are bright. The Tigers start the season with the loss of four of last year's eleven, among them Capt. John De Witt, but they have a promising squad of seventy from which to fill vacancies. With only one change, the veterans will probably resume their former positions, Cooney at left tackle, Dillon right guard, Short centre, and Capt. Foulke at right half back. Rulon-Miller, who played full back, is now being tried at right end.

The candidates for ends number over fifteen. Besides Rulon-Miller, Crawford, a substitute end in 1903, and Neville, from Dartmouth, are among the leaders. Conners, the big freshman from Mercersburg, who reported Thursday for the first time, is a strong end.

Burke, the light quarter back who played such an important rôle in the game at New Haven last season, was in the scrimmage for the first time yesterday. His clear headwork inspired the 'Varsity, which hammered the scrub line for repeated gains, but never succeeded in scoring. Little end running was done. Short, last year's centre, was tried at guard, and Waller took his position in the middle of the line. Short makes a powerful guard, and is a good ground gainer. Rulon-Miller was in his new position at right end after a rest of one day, and Stinard, the 220-pound freshman from Smith's Institute, was at left end.

Never in years have the football prospects been so bright at Ithaca as at present. Enough new men have reported to insure a good representation from the freshmen. Birmingham from Mercersburg Academy heads the list. He is a candidate for one of the back positions, where he has won an enviable reputation as a consistent player. Cook, from the University Preparatory School at Cleveland, is another good freshman. He weighs 183 pounds, and will be used at tackle. Hart is another heavy freshman, who is trying for centre. There are several old men who were either ineligible last year or were not registered in the university, but will be candidates for the team. Prominent among these is Furman, who played the full back position on the team two years ago when Dan Reed was coach. He was injured near the end of the season, and had to retire. Dewey, who was ineligible last year on account of the one-year rule, is playing a fine game at half back.

Yale's first week of football practice has shown a number of important things about the team which is to try to win back the championship for 1904. Varsity eleven has been formed of exceptionally good material. The second string of candidates is unusually weak. Fewer good men will be received from the incoming class than was expected. Yale will have to find two ends, a new guard, two new half backs, and a substitute quarter back. Of last year's team only Roraback, centre; Kinney and Capt. Hogan, tackles; Bloomer, guard; Shevlin, end; Rockwell, quarter back, and Bowman, full back, return. Kinney did not come up to standard last year at left tackle and will this year play left guard. Bloomer, who played a mediocre guard last year, will this year have another chance to duplicate his really remarkable work at tackle on Gordon Brown's 1901 championship eleven. Shevlin, the famous Yale end, now weighs over 200 pounds, and will be tried at full back.

The week has brought several promising new men to the front. Jack Cates, Andover end two seasons ago, and the best freshman player last year, is now the leading candidate for one of the two vacant end positions. Frambach and Thorpe did not play, and some of the other old men who will be available within the next two weeks have not yet reported. Individually Metzenthin played an excellent game at quarter-back, while Muir, for a new man, gave evidence of considerable ability at the end position. Brown and Stangland both played well, but the two other veterans were below their usual form. The line-up follows:

Columbia, 10.	Position.	Union, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

CARLISLE, Penn., Sept. 24.—Dickinson College won at football to-day from the University of Western Maryland by a score of 10 to 0 in a game notable for slow but careful playing. Dickinson lost the toss and kicked off, after which the scrimmages of the first half were confined mainly to the centre of the checkerboard. In the second half Dickinson made a series of rushes which brought them two touch-downs.

VIRGINIA, 16; RANDOLPH-MACON, 0.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Sept. 24.—Virginia opened her football season to-day, defeating Randolph-Macon College by a score of 16 to 0 in thirty minutes of play. RECORDS IN CANADIAN GAMES.

Sheriden Makes World's Figures with Discus—N. Y. A. C. Athletes Lead.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, Quebec, Sept. 24.—The annual championship games of the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union were run off here this afternoon under the most unfavorable weather, rain falling during the entire day. All of the American cracks turned up with the exception of Alex Grant of the New York Athletic Club, who was suddenly called to Detroit. The New York Athletic Club won the majority of events, beating the Greater New York Irish Athletic Association by one point, although the entry of Sheridan of the Greater New York Irish Athletic Association, who ran under protest by order of the Amateur Athletic Union, will change the results, as Sheridan won one first and two seconds.

The world's record for throwing the discus was broken by Sheridan, who threw 133 feet 6½ inches. The Canadian record for throwing the 16-pound hammer was broken by Flanagan, who threw 163 feet ¾ inches; P. J. Walsh, New York Athletic Club, captured the 100 yard run in 10 seconds, running through three inches of water on the track. Summary:

FATAL MIDAIR PLAY ON SWINGING SCAFFOLD

Painters Through Work Began Throwing Brushes.

PLUNGED DOWN SEVEN STORIES

One Man Instantly Killed—Surgeon Declares the Other Skylarker Cannot Live.

Skylarking at the end of their week's toil caused two painters to fall seven stories from a light, swinging scaffold on which they had been at work at the Cambridge Court Apartments at 142 West Forty-ninth Street yesterday afternoon. They were Henry Gravosky, thirty years old, of 193 East One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Street, who was instantly killed, and Joseph Morris of 75 Willett Street, who was picked up unconscious and so terribly injured that Dr. Irving, who was summoned with an ambulance, declared that he could not live.

The men were friends as well as fellow-workmen. They had laid down their paint pots when Morris, with a laugh, threw his wet paint brush at Gravosky, with the remark, "Here she comes, Harry." Gravosky caught it deftly and tossed it back at his comrade. Morris caught it, and the two men began a spirited game of catch and toss. The light scaffold on which they stood was hardly a yard wide, and it swayed back and forth with their movements.

Gravosky tossed the brush so that it flew a little to one side of the plank. Morris, still laughing, snatched at it and missed his footing. As he went over he tried to save himself by seizing the supporting ropes, but his hand missed, and with a cry that roused the entire building, he fell.

Morris leaped forward in an attempt to save him, but too late. He stood for an instant peering after the descending body, and then tenants of the building and passers-by in the street so far below, whose attention had been drawn by Gravosky's wild cry for help, saw him reel and stagger, and topple from the edge of the plank.

Both men fell into the basement, adding its depth to their fall. The dead man was carried to the police station, while Dr. Irving took Morris away in the ambulance.

FINN BURIES HATCHET.

Saratoga Harmony Too Irresistible, Declares "Battery Dan."

Justice Daniel E. Finn of the Municipal Court, better known as "Battery Dan," the Tammany leader in the First Assembly District, has had an attack of the Democratic harmony which pervaded the State Convention in Saratoga last week.

The innoculation also has extended to ex-Assemblyman Michael Halpin of the same district. They have buried the hatchet, and none save those who have lived among the stirring fights of the First District can appreciate what this means.

For years Halpin and Finn have fought one another with a vigor that only a factional fight can show, but Saratoga was too much for them. Finn and Halpin came back from Saratoga yesterday, and last night were walking about their district arm in arm and buying drinks for their followers, who until just now were flying at one another's throats.

"You see, it happened funny like," said Finn last night. "After the convention in Saratoga, when everybody was nominating his ancient enemy for a good job, all of us felt sort of exhilarated like from such an overdose of harmony. It got my blood going, just like the other young fellers, and that afternoon as I was walking along the street I see Halpin.

"Now Halpin and me has had our fights, but there was that harmony working, and so I walks up to Halpin and holds out my hand. Mike looks as though he would fall dead, that funny like you know. But I tells him that it's harmony fer mine, and that as a good Democrat it ought ter be harmony fer him, an' then Mike grabs me hand and the tears comes ter his eyes. We both look kinder sheepish like, and then we walks over to the caffy an' has something to put us in good shape. Then we goes ridin'. And, say, half the fellers we sees like ter drop dead seein' us together. I thought the district would have a fit to-night seein' us walking around together and no blood on the sidewalk. But it's harmony fer us now fer fair."

BUILD COLLIER AT NAVY YARD.

Sixteen-Knot Craft Will Follow Battleship Connecticut on Ways.

The ways on which the battleship Connecticut has been built in the Brooklyn Navy Yard will not remain idle long after the great vessel is launched next Thursday, for it has been planned to build one of the two proposed large steam colliers on the same site. These colliers were authorized at the last session of Congress, and they are to be of size, speed, and power to accompany a battle fleet. Each must have a capacity for carrying 5,000 tons of cargo coal, must have a trial speed of not less than 16 knots, and cost not exceeding $1,250,000 each.

The tugboat Nina, one of the largest of that class of vessels in the navy, which is a familair object to habitués of the navy yard, is to be hauled up alongside the Connecticut's ways to have a new hull built over her stanch frame, and then she will practically be a new boat.

The Kearsarge, flagship of the North Atlantic squadron, which arrived at the Navy Yard Thursday morning, needs extensive repairs, especially to her boilers, and she will probably not get away from the navy yard workmen for a couple of months yet.

The battleship Texas arrived off Tompkinsville from Menemsahn Bight yesterday morning, and in the afternoon the tug Powhatan took her up to the Navy Yard to undergo repairs.

HAT MAN TRIES SUICIDE.

Max Meuer Shoots Himself After Dropping $150 at Races.

Max Meuer, fifty-five years of age, who lives with his wife, two sons, and two daughters at 145 East Eighty-second Street, and is President of the Max Meuer Hat Company at 60 Bleecker Street, attempted suicide last night by shooting himself on a bench in "The Glade" in Central Park. The spot is about 100 feet west of Fifth Avenue near Seventy-seventh Street. He is now a prisoner at the Presbyterian Hospital, with four bullet wounds under his heart, and the surgeons do not believe that he can recover.

Policeman Werdam heard the shots from the revolver while he was at Seventy-eighth Street. He found Meuer stretched on a bench. Meuer was still conscious, but would make no explanation of his act. In his pockets were found $50. A programme of the Gravesend Bay races showed that Meuer had lost about $150 yesterday at the track. His family could not assign a motive for his act.

MAY EXHUME WOMAN'S BODY.

Dentist Can Tell Whether It Is That of Margaret Lynch.

Special to The New York Times.

FREEPORT, L. I., Sept. 24.—District Attorney Neiman received word to-day from Dr. John F. Shea, a dentist, of 6 Stuyvesant Avenue, Brooklyn, saying that he had completely repaired the teeth of Margaret Lynch of 344 Vernon Avenue, Brooklyn, five months ago and could tell from seeing the teeth of the woman, whose mysterious death here has created such a sensation, whether she was the Lynch girl or not.

The District Attorney said he would apply to Judge Kelly in the Supreme Court on Monday for permission to exhume the body that Dr. Shea might see it.

SEIZURE OF THE CRUSADER.

Doubted in Portland, Ore., That Japanese Took Possession of Her.

PORTLAND, Oregon, Sept. 24.—The British steamer Crusader, reported captured by the Japanese and taken to Hakodate, cleared from this port Aug. 31 with 2,880,000 feet of lumber and 3,000 bundles of lath. Her cargo was valued at $26,650. The vessel was under charter to the Pacific Export Lumber Company, and the cargo was consigned to merchants in Shanghai and Taku. She is owned by the Eskside Steamship Company, Limited, of Whitby, England.

At the office of the Pacific Export Lumber Company no reason for the reported seizure could be ascertained. The vessel was loaded with a neutral cargo, consigned to neutral ports, and she sailed under a neutral flag. A large portion of her cargo was consigned to the Paul Brunet Company, at Tien-Tsin, the port of receipt being Taku. The vessel's route would take her very close to Hakodate, and it is surmised here that the vessel was merely stopped by the Japanese fleet engaged in examining papers and cargoes of neutral vessels in Far Eastern waters.

GAVE DOG POISON ON SPOON.

Policeman Ends Rabid Animal's Life in Novel Way.

Mrs. Levi Williams, who lives on the second floor of 57 Montgomery Street, Jersey City, had as a household pet a small fox terrier. The dog suddenly became rabid last night and jumped from a second-story window to the sidewalk. There it bit a man on the leg.

The dog then ran into the office of the United States Express Company, opposite, causing the clerks to take refuge on the counters. Policeman Entwistle ran in and tried to reach the dog with his club. The animal dodged under the counter and made its way back to its home, where it took refuge in a closet.

Entwistle obtained some prussic acid at a drug store, put it on a spoon tied to a stick, and held it under the dog's nose. The dog snapped at the spoon, got the full benefit of the drug, and fell over dead.

KILLED BY ELEVATOR WEIGHTS.

Workman Put His Head Into Shaft as They Descended.

Thomas Rux, twenty-one years of age, whose residence is unknown, was crushed to death by the counterweights of an elevator in the unfinished apartment house at 647 Madison Avenue, where he had been employed as a painter yesterday afternoon.

On the sixth floor of the building, where Rux was working, there is a window opening on the elevator shaft. Rux is supposed to have put his head out of the window at the time the boy in charge of the elevator started it on its way up. The counterweights of 1,200 pounds descended in their groove and caught Rux's head. He was drawn into the shaft and crushed up against the wall.

Policeman O'Connor arrested Frank W. Rose of 59 West One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Street, the Superintendent of the building, and Gustave J. Spachman, eighteen years of age, of 560 East One Hundred and Forty-fourth Street, who was in charge of the elevator, on the technical charge of homicide.

Crowds Visit Submarine Porpoise.

The submarine torpedo boat Porpoise, under convoy of the torpedo-boat destroyer Winslow, arrived at the Brooklyn Navy Yard yesterday from Newport. At first she lay for two or three hours near Dry Dock No. 2, but the crowd of sightseers grew to such proportions as to make it impossible to do any work on her, and she steamed around into Whitney Basin. It is expected that she will proceed to Annapolis on Monday, and will be detained there for the practical instruction of the midshipmen.

MANY MEETINGS HERE FOR PEACE DELEGATES

Local Committee Busy on Plans for Entertainment.

BIG RECEPTION ARRANGED

Well-Known Men to Speak at Cooper Union—Trips and Meetings Planned.

All of the foremost delegates to the International Peace Congress, which will hold a series of meetings in Boston from Oct. 3 to 7, will be entertained in this city in the week following the Boston meetings. The full details of the series of entertainments and meetings here are not completed, but enough of them were given out yesterday to show that the delegates are to have a busy time not only as guests of the various city departments, but of private individuals interested in the peace movement.

The Peace Congress in Boston is the thirteenth to be held and the second session in America, and the delegates are among the best-known men and women in Europe and America. There are also prominent delegates from China, Japan, and India.

One of the most important features of the entertainment here will be a large public meeting in Cooper Union on Oct. 12, at which the speakers will be men of international reputation in the peace movement. The delegates will be entertained at luncheon in the Hotel Astor by the Chamber of Commerce and the Teachers College will give an entertainment and tea.

From among the many invitations extended by the city departments, the committee in charge has decided so far to accept that extended by Dr. Darlington, the Health Commissioner, who will take the delegates on a trip over New York waters in the department steamer and show them the appliances with which the city is equipped to fight disease and protect the health of its citizens. The Board of Education will have a lot of interesting exhibits ready for the inspection of the delegates, and there will be at least one private entertainment, that given by Mrs. Villard at her home, in Dobbs Ferry.

One of the interesting delegates who will be in this city is Pastor Charles Wagner of Paris, the preacher to great congregations on the Boulevard Beaumarchais. Pastor Wagner is the author of "The Simple Life." He will visit President Roosevelt, the author of "The Strenuous Life," at the invitation of the latter while he is in America.

The Baroness Von Suttner, one of the foremost women of Continental Europe, who was the only woman admitted to the opening of the Peace Congress at The Hague, will be here. Wherever the Baroness von Suttner speaks in Europe crowds wait for hours to see and hear her. She is the author of the remarkable story, "Lay Down Your Arms," and the founder of the Austrian Peace Society in 1891. Her story has been called the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the peace movement and has exerted a wide influence in favor of universal peace.

Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, who was one of the foremost members of The Hague Court, and the leader of the arbitration movement in France, will be here at the head of the French delegation. The Baron is a grandnephew of Benjamin Constant, and is one of the most interesting members of the French Chamber of Deputies. He has traveled much, and studied civil government extensively both abroad and at home. He was Minister Plenipotentiary in London until his entrance into Parliament in 1886.

Much interest attaches to the visit of Miss Sophia Sturge of Birmingham, for it was her father, the eminent English philanthropist, Joseph Sturge, the friend of so many of our anti-slavery leaders, who in Boston, in 1841, first proposed an international peace congress. That first congress met in Boston in 1843.

Dr. Yamei Kin, the scholarly Chinese woman now in this country, will speak for China, and the Chinese Minister at Washington is also expected here.

Sir William Mather of Manchester and Sir John MacDonnell, Professor of Comparative Law in University College, London, are among the eminent friends of the peace cause who will be here. Sir William Mather first visited the United States in 1893 as Royal Commissioner to report on our system of industrial education, and from that time to this he has been in close touch with American life and thought.

Miss Margaret Noble, who will make an address here, is regarded as one of the most forcible women speakers of the day, and her reputation in this regard was strengthened by the addresses which she gave in this country a few years ago on her educational work among the women in India. Her book, "The Web of Indian Life," is said to be one of the most interesting works on life in India ever published. In Boston there will be a special meeting for Miss Noble's address.

Dr. Thomas Barclay of London will also attend. It was he who started the movement among Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce in France and England for an arbitration treaty between those two countries. Dr. Barclay spoke before 175 boards and chambers, which passed resolutions in favor of the treaty recently signed.

Among the other delegates who will be here are the Right Rev. John Perceval, Bishop of Hereford; William Randal Cremer, the "Dick Whittington" of Parliament; Mrs. Cobden-Sickert, daughter of Richard Cobden; Percy Alden, the founder of Mansfield House and a leader in the Settlement movement; Peter Curran, representing the General Federation of Trades Unions; Miss E. M. Rowntree of York, of the distinguished family of economists; M. Siegfried of Havre, who has a wide acquaintance here; M. Gustave Hubbard, editor of La Justice Internationale; Dr. Adolph Richter, President of the German Peace Society; Richard Feldhaus, regarded as the most gifted of the German speakers on the topic; Frau Selenka of Munich, John Lund, member of the Norwegian Parliament; Signor E. T. Moneta, President of the Italian Peace Society; L'Abbé Pichot of Monaco, and Prof. Pierre Clerget of Locle, representing the Swiss Peace Society.

A large local committee of entertainment has been formed under the Chairmanship of Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell, and includes:

Andrew D. White,	Mrs. R. W. De Forest,
Andrew Carnegie,	Mrs. William Einstein,
President J. G. Schurman,	Mrs. Norman Hapgood,

As the average value of the importation is $140 per 1,000 feet, the difference in duty is very large.

FORTY PAGES.

LEGISLATION BY EDICT.

Undoubtedly there are many oppressive and some absurd provisions of the tariff which should be modified or wholly repealed, even from the protectionist point of view. But the tariff is fixed by statute, and save where its rates are expressly left to the discretion of the Executive—as in the Dingley clauses relating to reciprocity—they should be changed, if at all, by the deliberate, formal, and responsible action of the National Legislature. It is only in substantial despotisms that laws are at the mercy of the Chief Ruler. In Russia "a breath can make them as a breath has made." It should be different in the United States.

Apparently Mr. LODGE and President ROOSEVELT do not think so. A ruling was recently made by Assistant Secretary of the Treasury C. H. KEEP, in the discharge of his regular duties, that certain forms of "pickled sheepskins" had been advanced beyond the condition of raw or uncured skins, and therefore were subject to a duty of 20 per cent. He may have been wrong or he may have been right as to the interpretation of the law and the facts; but it was his duty to interpret them, and it was neither the duty nor the right of the President to overrule his interpretation, or suspend it, or in any way to interfere with it.

According to the Boston papers the President, on the solicitation of Senator LODGE, moved by the protests of manufacturers who use pickled sheepskins, has ordered, in effect, that the duty be not collected for the present. In our judgment any duty on a material of manufacture is a mistake, a hindrance to enterprise, a check on industry, a bar to foreign and domestic trade, and usually a fine imposed on one class for the profit of another. But all the evils of legislation for private advantage are complicated and made worse by the assumption by the President of the right to change the operation of the law. To be ruled by laws of this sort is bad; to be subject to rule by edict is worse.

"FRIEND OF THE REPUBLIC."

McClure's Magazine has done well at this moment to publish the address of CARL SCHURZ on the occasion of the unveiling of the bust of GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS in the Lenox Library. And the editor does well, in contrasting the subject of the address with certain persons whose career has attracted the attention of the magazine as "enemies of the Republic," to designate Mr. CURTIS as a "friend of the Republic." There will never be a time when the character of such a man as Mr. CURTIS may not be studied with advantage by American citizens, but at present that study is peculiarly appropriate because we are engaged in a National canvass which demands of every citizen candid consideration of the facts and independent judgment of his duty.

Mr. CURTIS has often been praised, and justly, for his courage in the assertion and advocacy of his own convictions and his firmness in resisting the temptations and the coercive forces which in our politics are brought to bear by the party system. The most important service he rendered to his country was undoubtedly done through breaking party ties and steadfastly maintaining what he believed to be the right in face of a kind and amount of pressure which few men could resist. Very soon after the close of the civil war and the triumph of the cause of emancipation to which he had given such priceless aid he entered on the task of trying to reform the abuses to which long success had exposed his party. To that task, and to the larger one of divorcing the public service from partisan control, he devoted the riper years of his life. In this work he showed a strength of purpose, a heroism in sacrificing much that most men hold precious, an utter disregard of selfish inducement rare indeed and deserving the highest praise.

But to our mind it is not these qualities, sterling as they were and unusual, that constitute Mr. CURTIS'S greatest claim to admiration and gratitude. It is rather the care he took to be right. He was the most nearly completely open-minded man whose career is known to this generation, with the possible exception of Mr. LINCOLN, whom, with of course many differences, he strongly resembled. Mr. CURTIS was not only open-minded, but he was patiently and severely careful to inform himself, to study both sides of any case, to weigh accurately and impartially the bases of his action, to be just even to those he was compelled to despise, and to look as far forward as he could to test his conclusions by their probable consequences. It is easy for men of energetic minds and a high ethical instinct to be reformers of a certain type. With the consciousness of good intention there often goes the scorn of those who differ and the reflex vanity of stubborn righteousness. Of this Mr. CURTIS was innocent. He did not content himself with destructive effort, wonderfully effective as he was in destructive criticism. He felt deeply the obligation of building up as well as of tearing down, and he undertook the latter only as a preparation for the former.

This was shown in his consistent position with reference to the advancement of the merit system, commonly called civil service reform. To that work he gave the better part of his strength for the last thirty years of his life, with constantly increasing efficiency. Brilliant and telling as was his advocacy of the principle in the press and on the platform, it was a small part of his labor in the movement. Before he was selected by President GRANT as head of the first Civil Service Commission he had studied with the utmost thoroughness the organization of the various departments, and from that time on there was never a criticism of the merit system based on alleged impracticability that he was not prepared to consider, to meet if possible, to respect if it deserved respect. In this it is true he resembled a number of others engaged in the movement, but he and Mr. SCHURZ were distinguished by the sound practical work they did year in and year out to make the merit system worthy of success and then to secure its success. With all his rare gifts and his supreme grace of character and mental equipment Mr. CURTIS was distinctly the kind of man who "does things"; his especial distinction was in the infinite pains he took that the "things" should be worth doing and that they should be done in the right way.

ELEMENTS AND COMPOUNDS.

Sir WILLIAM RAMSAY is undoubtedly a great man, who is receiving no more attention than he is entitled to. He is also a modest man, as far as possible from the charlatan, and to find himself associated by the quidnuncs of the newspaper press with experiments pointing to results sought by the alchemists can give him no other pleasure than resides in the amusement it affords. His observations pointing to the conclusion, which he accepts with proper caution, that in the study of the products of the breaking down of radi-active substances of high specific gravity we may find the origin of the ordinary elements, are extremely interesting, especially in view of the confirmation furnished by the evolution of helium from the emanations of radium. If, however, they warrant the belief that the physicists are on the verge of discovering that in its ultimate form matter is of uniform character and that the number of elements may ultimately be reduced to one, the largest measure of credit which Sir WILLIAM can claim in this connection is that he is gradually nearing the earliest recorded concepts of matter by the process of elimination and exclusion. And this is all he would himself claim.

The most surprising fact in connection with modern scientific investigation in the domains of chemistry and physics is that every new truth established brings us nearer to the views of those whose concepts of nature were reached by abstract reasoning. The sages of Egypt and India taught their disciples that water was the primal element out of which all matter was formed. That water is a compound was not found out until comparatively recently, and in the recognition of water as the primal element these philosophers of remote antiquity came very close to the view toward which all exact investigation seems to be tending, that the only indivisible substance in the natural world is hydrogen. This hypothesis of the fontal element was taught in the Greek schools six centuries before Christ, and gave place to the theory of ARISTOTLE of four fontal elements—earth, air, fire, and water. For more than a thousand years the Aristotelian hypothesis stood almost unchallenged, until the coming of PARACELSUS, that marvelous charlatan who introduced mercury into materia medica, proclaimed himself the sole monarch of physics, publicly burned the writings of GALEN and AVICENNA, and declared that he had more wisdom in the hairs of his beard than was found in all the universities and books together. PARACELSUS certainly had the courage of his convictions. To the four fontal elements of ARISTOTLE he opposed the theory of the three compound principles—salt, sulphur, and mercury—which was at least a step in the direction of an orderly classification of inorganic compounds. But the influence of PARACELSUS was transient and the Aristotelian hypothesis held its ground as the popular concept of the nature of matter until the period of PRIESTLEY, CAVENDISH, and LAVOISIER. It should not be forgotten, however, that in 1665 ROBERT BOYLE, large-minded scholar and conscientious investigator, laid down again the broad proposition that "there is but one universal matter of things." Even Sir WILLIAM RAMSAY has not as yet so fully emancipated himself from the theory of many elements that he can take his stand with BOYLE, although he is apparently moving that way as fast as the conservatism which necessarily characterizes the true scientist will permit.

TO ABOLISH THE TENEMENT.

Dr. WILLIAM H. MAXWELL'S plan for the abolition of the tenement house from New York is interesting, but it is difficult to see just how it would work out in practice. Granting that the tenement house is a great evil, it meets the requirement of housing the poor of a great city much better than did the multiple apartment dwelling which it succeeded. As neighborhoods changed and from one or another cause deteriorated, large private dwellings, once the most fashionable of their kind, were abandoned by owners or tenants, and after vicissitudes as boarding houses and worse began to fill up with families willing to pay relatively large rentals for floors or parts of floors. These were the typical tenement houses of about 1850. The conditions in them were incomparably worse than any found in the modern tenement, built for a multiple tenancy, and under more or less strict and intelligent official supervision of plans and construction. Large rooms were in many instances divided between several families, their only partitions being chalk lines on the floor. Light and ventilation were enjoyed only by those who were able to rent the outside rooms. The modern tenement house represented a better utilization of the land thus occupied, and gradually the type of building has been so improved that dark rooms and distinctly insanitary original conditions are no longer tolerated. Overcrowding is also restrained, and only those who elect to live in squalor and to surround themselves with unwholesome conditions need to do so—unless, indeed, so poor that they could not pay rentals representing interest on better quarters. For such, housekeeping is a failure no matter what may be done for them, and probably the only solution for the social problem they create is that found by Count RUMFORD in Munich through the building of municipal workhouses where gainful trades were taught and self-respect and ambition inculcated.

Dr. MAXWELL would seem to be mistaken when he says "the tenement house destroys the home." To say that some tenements do this would be more discreetly moderate; but in typical tenements may be found in New York a great many thousands of quiet, well-ordered, and happy homes in which reside families whose temporary condition makes such residence necessary. As a method of correcting the local evil of the multiple apartment dwelling Dr. MAXWELL proposes the following:

> The municipality should employ its credit to purchase tracts of unoccupied land upon which to erect model homes for workingmen amid pleasant and sanitary surroundings, and rent or sell them at a moderate profit.

This would help a great many people, no doubt, but it would not eradicate the evil of the tenement house nor make a very appreciable impression upon it. As those of frugal habits moved away to the municipal housing areas and began to save money to acquire title others would take the places they vacated—largely immigrants who find better opportunities of gaining a living in a great city than they would in the rural or farming districts. It is conceivable, of course, that local conditions might so change that land on Manhattan Island would become too valuable for tenement-house neighborhoods and that improved rapid transit would reconcile wage earners to residence remote from their work; but for the present the discussion of the eradication of the tenement house is largely academic. Its practical aspects are in establishing and continuing such work as Commissioner DE FOREST began and which Commissioner CRANE is much less successfully performing.

KIPLING BAITS THE BULL.

Mr. RUDYARD KIPLING takes the occasion of complimenting a Frenchman for his book on England in order to unload his conscience of further disgust anent certain classes of his fellow-countrymen. But this time his wrath embraces more Britons than muddled oafs and flanneled fools. "There exists," he remarks to M. D'HUMIERES, "an England, ruined by too much ease, which slumbers, and, because it snores, imagines that it thinks," and he felicitates himself that M. D'HUMIERES has not discovered its existence.

For a realist Mr. KIPLING has slipped into a curious mistake. People who snore do not know that they snore; therefore that stertorous or ronchitizing England of which he is the discoverer cannot base upon the knowledge of her ignominious habit any belief concerning her powers to think. It was an Englishman who remarked that the world is a comedy to those that think, a tragedy to those that feel, and hereafter we shall have to place Mr. KIPLING among HORACE WALPOLE'S second category, as one who feels; for if he had thought a moment he would not have been caught nodding; we must not, in these circumstances, say snoring.

What Englishmen will have to reproach Mr. KIPLING for is not so much wot he says as the nawsty way he says it; and when in the course of time they reach the point of perceiving that in his haste he has arraigned them not only with snoring but being aware of their vice and insolently imagining, because they snore, that they also think—then look out for Punch! How many cartoons are the genial editors of that sheet already considering which deal with KIPLING and confusion of thought!

We shall not follow this remarkable letter into the mazes of British morals further than to protest that Mr. KIPLING should not assume as a fact what has never been proved, namely, that the eating of meat is dangerous to morals. In this there lurks a quaint survival of mediaeval ideas based on similarity of words and the confused notion that one may be cured by the hair of the dog that bit you. Animal food does not necessarily rouse animal passion and public morality suffers just as much among vegetarians by compulsion as among meat eaters by preference. That hideous flaunting of immorality which surprises visitors to London and Liverpool can be explained, as might be inferred from Mr. KIPLING'S amazing letter, neither by the eating of meat nor by the gloomy skies and fogs of London. Some other origin must be invented which may be supported by analogies elsewhere. Antiquarians, for example, might point to the singular customs attributed to the Britons by Greek and Roman writers and make a plea for ostracism as the cause of England's moral obliquities. Historians might claim that the wicked Normans corrupted that pure and angelic race, descended from immigrants from the Baltic, or ascribe to the Pharisees of the Commonwealth a tendency to quiet naughtiness and to loud claims to purity of life. But to explain it by fogs, British mutton, and American beef is really straining the back of the camel of false science.

While differing from Mr. KIPLING in his conclusions, it is by no means to be wished that he had not written this letter. On the contrary. Would that he might follow it up by others, not quite so foggy and beefy, to be sure, but just as compact of irascibility and cocksureness. He does not use the rapier, but it is something to hear the thud of his quarterstaff, and it is pleasant to sympathize with the pleasure he feels in whacking the enemies he thinks he sees. As a bear baiter he has won his laurels; as a baiter of John Bull he is doing merry stunts. When it's the bear's turn all England smiles; when he baits the bull Russians and Frenchmen rejoice. And then there are others. Germans lay themselves open to caustic attack, and as for our own dear people—just wait till RUDYARD KIPLING gets round to us. There'll be wigs on the green. There'll be howls from the Yankees with gossamer skins.

EDUCATED HORSES.

The educational aptitude of animals is considerable, but in general it stops at certain moderate bounds; the showman's pig, if you believed the showman, could do everything but talk and fiddle. But so much admitted, these performances marked a line beyond which it could not go. The circus horse of the average standard can execute an endless variety of engaging tricks, but feats of the pure reason or exercises of the imagination are not expected of it. Berlin, however, has an animal of the species now on show which has gone beyond precedent in cultivation and exhibits phenomena of cerebration out of all parallels. Squads of excited biologists swarm around it and the professor host rolls in upon the limitary barriers of its showing place like a sea. The season of theories on the case is about to set in, and we are likely to have enough of them before it draws to a close. If any of them support the argument that horses in general are capable of responding to intellectual training and taking in the elements of a high school education it is open to anybody who likes to take the other side with all the testimonies of experience going back, not quite, but pretty near to the primal hipparion, to sustain his contention. The fact is, we should all be glad of any such extension of the horse's powers. He is such a good friend and so manifestly in sympathy with all tolerable representatives of the race which governs and protects him, that a freer communication of the same than that of an unsatisfactory whinny or a neigh which may mean anything ought to be open to him. As the hippic paragon at Berlin knows the multiplication table and notes of the musical scale he may learn to talk presently, giving hope that others of his kind under certain disciplines of education may come to do the same thing, so that we may hold colloquies with them and enter into the spirit of their mental processes. The animal mentioned has not got so far as that yet, but is well on toward it, and before the cold weather sets in may be able to hold discourse with his beleaguering professors in some dialect that both can understand. It would be mortifying to discover that its kind still kept so poor an opinion of us as that held by SWIFT'S cultivated and conversible houyhnhnms. But considering that the most pretentious of our species cut their tails and manes off for fashion's sake and torture them in various ways to promote attitudes and motions of style, while the brute of our species heaps on them all manner of cruelty and ill, it would not be at all surprising if they did so.

$5 WORTH OF FUN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A recent arrival in this country, a young, educated German, who had learned English "as she is taught," happened to find himself short of money, and obtained a loan of $5 from a friend of mine. After the lapse of several months, on being reminded of the debt, he wrote the following letter in reply:

"Dear Sir: I received your letter and beg to say That all the days long I thought of the $5 I owe you. This debt is very dredfully to my mind.

"You seem to mean that I had not the will to repay the money, but you can rest assure that as soon as it will be possible to me you get your money, when not at once so in weekly payments. It is not wants of will what retains me from the repayment, but the fact that I won't see my way to live from four Dollars. I assure you once more that my debt is no loss to you.

"Up to date I did not get another position nor mare salary. When you doubt my declaration it is free to you to ask my employer.

"When you will take other steps I cannot prevent you, but mind that you will probably make me positionless, and what that means you know best yourself.

"Once more I beg to have patience. The trade receives a betterment, and I hope so, too, and my first step will be then to repay you."

My friend has little hope of ever getting back his money, but considers that he has had about $5 worth of fun.

KIPLING ON BRITISH CHASTITY.

An Administrative Necessity—England "Ruined by Excess of Prosperity."

Nearly all of an interesting and characteristic letter from Rudyard Kipling appeared in Le Figaro of Paris Sept. 18. It was originally sent to M. Robert d'Humières, the principal translator of Mr. Kipling's works in French and the author of "l'Ile et l'Empire de Grande-Bretagne." ("The Island and Empire of Great Britain.") The letter was written in acknowledgment of a copy of this book. A translation of those parts which were presented in the Paris paper reads as follows:

"Dear M. d'Humières, I have read your book on 'The Island and the Empire.' It has given me real pleasure, and I thank you very much for it. * * * There are few things more interesting than to see one's own country from the outside, and with eyes as penetrating (and as indulgent) as yours the liveliest pleasure is added to this interest.

"From the point of view of an inhabitant, I am specially delighted with the homage you pay to the energy of the race. Some of us to-day are troubled with doubts on this point. There exists—and I congratulate myself that you have not discovered it—an England which, ruined by excess of prosperity, sleeps, and because it snores loudly imagines it is thinking.

"Your remarks on the army strike me as perfectly just. You put your finger on the vital point of our system when you speak of soldiers who 'understand that they must not understand.' I believe you touch there the secret of many of our successes, and also many of our reverses. It is the first thing that we teach our boys.

"Your studies of India are a sheer delight for me, particularly those on Rajputana, where I wandered when I was young, through Chittore, Jeypore, and other places. I know little of the Southern India which has so fascinated you, although a great part of the poetry of dead India lies there.

"I wish you had seen something of new India—the India of factories and railways, where the imperturbable native of the East moves among modern machinery and worships his gods in the shadow of engine sheds and boilers. This India is not pretty, but it is significant.

"Believe me, I am with you heart and soul in what you say of the value which should be attached to a good understanding between our two countries, not only because of its present utility, but for the sake of to-morrow. Our two peoples, it seems to me, are the complement of one another in temperament and destiny, logically and in reality.

"Even were this not the case, one must remember that there is not so much liberty left in Eastern Europe that the two standard bearers of human freedom can afford to dispute between themselves. Both have to do with enslaved peoples, with the inhabitants of blinded or throttled lands, where the word of the monarch is absolute law. If we were to quarrel, who would be the gainer? The Middle Ages furnished with modern weapons. Can any one doubt this?

"If I could manage to see you I could discuss with more leisure the thousand interesting points of your book, notably what you say about the coldness of our national temperament. Believe me, our 'chastity' is not all cant.

"It is an administrative necessity imposed by the density of the population. Imagine a country with a population of 400 to the square mile, imbued with a sensuality at once refined and aggressive. It would be an orgy, and business would suffer from it.

"Besides, our is a meat-fed people, 6,000,000 of whom (more than a seventh of the whole) live in a city which for five months of the year is enveloped in semi-darkness, alternating with profound obscurity. We realise that here is a cause of irritation for certain nervous centres, therefore we—this people—take exercise in order to counteract this abnormal stimulus.

"'We understand that we must not understand.' To understand everything is no doubt to pardon everything. But it also means to commit everything. * * *

"I have only one grievance against you, but it is a serious one. You say that I adore Offenbach. Now, even I, who am no musician, can claim some knowledge of agreeable sounds, and I fear that you have misunderstood me. No, never Offenbach, unless on the barrel organ to bring back to my memory the songs of the music halls—my own, perhaps.

"Really, I would rather be the 'aggressive imperialist' of the legend than a worshipper of Offenbach.

"Very sincerely yours,

"RUDYARD KIPLING."

Organized Labor on Barge Canal.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you kindly give me space in your valuable paper for a few suggestions on the subject of organized labor on the barge canal?

The large majority vote given in favor of the enlargement was mainly contributed by organized laborers, but notwithstanding that fact, under the present management of the canal, organized laborers will get less benefit from the building of the canal than any other class of people.

I have been told by the engineers in charge in the State Engineer's office at Albany that the plans were made for constructing the canal with cement and iron, consequently there will be no work for masons or stonecutters.

The enlargement of the Erie Canal will cost a large sum of money, and the taxpayers are interested in having the work done with material procured in this State so that the money will be kept at home. When there is employment given to laborers and mechanics along the line, all business in the State will receive some benefit, but if the canal is to be constructed with iron and cement, the steel barons of Pennsylvania and the cement trusts everywhere will get a large share of the money which should be kept in this State.

I have been connected with public works for fifty years, and after consulting eminent engineers in different parts of the country on the subject of cement, have no hesitancy in saying that it will not stand the test of time. Any one having doubts on the subject might go and examine the foundation of the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor. He will find that it is cracking open, and already crumbling away, while all other works there done with natural stone are as sound as they were when first constructed.

This article is not inspired by political motives, and I have no interest in any quarry. But I believe that if the people of this State wish to build a canal that will last as long as they want to use it, they should insist upon the locks and other structures being built with stone, plenty of which may be procured along the line of the canal.

To accomplish this the canal must be put under new management at the ensuing election, and men put in control who will work for the interest of the State instead of that of foreign trusts and corporations.

NOT AN OPEN CONVENTION.

Methods Employed at Saratoga Not Truly Democratic.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I would not wish to minimise the good results of the Democratic Convention which closed at Saratoga yesterday—as I intend to support the ticket to the extent of my modest abilities—but would nevertheless like to call attention to one feature of the gathering.

A few weeks ago ex-Chairman Frank Campbell is reported to have called at State Headquarters and made a plea for an "open" convention. Since that time the talk for an open convention has grown, and various leaders have put themselves on record as favoring it, and the hopes of a long-bossed Democracy had risen accordingly.

At 10 o'clock yesterday morning it was proclaimed in the corridor of the Grand Union Hotel that all "conferences" had been of no avail to "fix a slate," and that the convention would beyond question be open. Ex-Senator Murphy, Mr. Belmont, Mr. Peabody, Mr. Rodie, Senator McCarren, and others were quoted as favoring the idea. It was even said that one or two of these gentlemen stated that they thought a spirited contest over the nomination for Governor, resulting in the nomination of the most popular man, would be a healthy process of invigorating an organization which (the rest is mine) for many years had not been permitted to do its own thinking. This news was welcomed on all sides, and delegates and others went to the convention hall prepared to witness a return to genuine Democratic methods in nominating candidates.

The convention had adjourned on Tuesday until 11 A. M. on Wednesday. Eleven o'clock came, and 12 o'clock came, but Chairman Hornblower did not assume the chair. Meantime it was rumored among the restless and weary delegates and spectators that another "conference" was going on. An hour and a quarter after the time to which the convention had specifically adjourned the Chairman had not assumed his duties. About this time messengers rushed into the hall, and soon it was whispered on all sides "It's Herrick." Four or five men whose names need not be mentioned now entered accompanied by the Chairman. The convention was called to order, and the rest is told in your news columns this morning.

I will not venture to assert that the nominees of an "open" convention would have been better than those chosen yesterday, but the method would have been truly Democratic and would have served as an inspiration to the opening of the campaign. The responsibility for the fact that the convention was not "open" must rest with one man—William B. Hornblower—who had the day before made the most magnificent Democratic speech that most of his hearers had listened to in many years.

POOR STREET CAR SERVICE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Is the city ordinance requiring the car companies to run a car every twenty minutes after midnight still in force?

If it is, why is the Amsterdam Avenue line allowed to discontinue its service above One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street after midnight?

These cars are most shamefully crowded at all hours of the day by the simple expedient of short circuiting the route at various points below One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, so that about one car in six will cover the whole distance. Complaints of indignities suffered by the female members of families using them are of daily occurrence.

In order to get from One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street to Seventy-sixth Street on Amsterdam Avenue at an early hour this morning it was necessary to take the Third Avenue line to Eighth Avenue, and there transfer down.

At this point a car was deliberately rushed off by the conductor, when a few seconds' delay would have allowed the passengers to board his car. At this hour there were about two cars between the depot at Fiftieth Street and Central Bridge, yet the conductors are allowed to act on the rules of midday service. The privileges of the streets are abused by allowing the companies to run "dead" cars when they fail to provide living ones for waiting passengers on the streets.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to congratulate you on your editorial, "The New Morality." Of course it cannot be disassociated from the political situation which called it forth, but if that were possible the editorial in question would still shine.

Its brilliancy of conception and pungency of expression, it is a performance not to be surpassed. You certainly bowled the advocates of the "new" morality over on that stroke. THOMAS A. STREET.

WHY CHEAP CLERKS ARE COSTLY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I quite agree with "P." in his letter printed in your edition of to-day. The pay doled out to efficient office help is neither in keeping with the requirements, the education, nor the social standing expected, and in this respect employers are very much at fault. They expect their office staff to be a credit to their establishment, and yet expect them to dress and live on a salary which, on the average, is only about half of what the engineers of the elevated railway receive.

Besides, while men in that station of life may have longer hours, yet when forced to work overtime they receive extra pay, generally two hours' pay for one hour of work, while the poor office man, when he works overtime, which is very frequently the case, is expected to do so for supper money only.

Another point where employers are very largely at fault is in employing as bookkeepers, cashiers, office managers, the general riff raff that we see, men utterly incapable of holding the positions they do. Were they to employ efficient men, and pay them well for their services, the work would be done much more satisfactorily to employers, and in the end more cheaply.

There would be fewer defalcations and less necessity of calling in experts to find out "where you are at."

From my experience I would say that the average cheap bookkeeper is an absolute loss to a firm; he has seldom the faintest idea of what a balance is, nor how to get one, and seems to be perfectly satisfied when he "almost balances," little knowing that in a balance you might as well be out $10,000 as one cent. HIS FIRST DEMOCRATIC VOTE.

With Republicans Since 1856, He Thinks Roosevelt Unsafe.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have been a strong adherent of the Republican Party and devoted to its principles for many years, but President Roosevelt has infected so much of his manner and methods of his own personality into his administration, and forsaken the underlying principles of the foundation of our Republic, that now for the first time since I cast my vote, in 1856, I will vote for Alton Brooks Parker, the Democratic Presidential candidate. President Roosevelt's letter of acceptance helped me to come to this decision.

God has prospered this Nation and brought it to its present exalted position among the nations of the world for the purpose that it might fulfill the mission of peace; but peace with the outside world cannot be maintained by our Nation, if its President, through a strenuous disposition, assumes a belligerent attitude, with a chip on his shoulder, desiring to give some real or fancied enemy an opportunity to strike it off.

When we believe, as a people, that this spirit is backed by a disposition thoroughly imbued with militarism and imperialistic motives, then it is time for this Nation to call a halt.

Fight when we must, but not unjustly, because we are a Nation of peace and our country a home for the oppressed.

A nation is not exalted by acts of violence, or by oppressing the weak. Neither can a nation reach the highest plane of civilization, by example of a strenuous life, accompanied with a desire to kill and shed blood, whether it be of the animal or human species.

"Simon Peter drew his sword and smote the servant of the High Priest," but his Master rebuked him, saying, "Put up again thy sword into its place, for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

This Nation, in the next four years, may be called upon to pass through a mass of difficulties. International questions of great importance may confront us which will require the keenest intellectual diplomacy to keep our Nation from becoming entangled with other powers of the world. There are also vital questions of National importance that must be settled—monopolies, strikes, investigations, and punishments of dishonest public officials, squandering uselessly the public money, and the rich trust combines which are eating like a cancer into the very life of the Nation, the tariff to be adjusted properly. Can the people trust the present Executive? Is he safe? I think not. Therefore, I advocate the cause of the Democratic nominee, Alton B. Parker, because of the vast difference between the two candidates. The one, strenuous, erratic, and hasty; the other, with a judicial, trained mind, thoughtful, competent, careful, firm as a rock where justice leads him, sympathetic, and dignified.

Not since the days of Thomas Jefferson (the immortal) has the Democratic Party made a better nomination.

Alton B. Parker was my fellow-townsman for twenty years. I can speak from knowledge of the man, and say to the people of these United States that he is a man who can be trusted in the highest office within the gift of the people.

For these reasons I break away from my old affiliations and will use my energy to elect Alton B. Parker, who had the nobleness of heart to refuse the nomination rather than deceive the people, unless the St. Louis Convention inserted in its platform his famous message relating to the gold standard of the country.

THE ECONOMICS OF TYPHOID.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your edition of the 21st I read an editorial entitled "The Economics of Typhoid," referring to the cost of preventable typhoid fever in Philadelphia.

It is indeed a sad fact that in our days such loss of human life and money should be caused by the impurity of drinking water in large cities. Why is it that communities do not take the proper means to prevent this? There has been much talking for years about purifying water and killing germs, but nothing has been done. Is it that science has not furnished the right means which could be adopted?

It should be of interest to compare the amount of money spent for the lives of 5,000 typhoid stricken Philadelphians with the cost of preventing their being assailed by this disease, by some means of sterilising the drinking water.

I have some figures in mind, which I heard of in Europe last Summer. There has been some stir made in papers by the invention of a German chemist. Whose method to free the water of all kinds of germs seems to be infallible. He as well as certain institutions using his process claim that the cost of sterilising water per capita a day would be somwhat around 1 cent. And further, he pretends that people being infected with typhoid could, if applied in time, be relieved of the disease by using his means as an antitoxin. He estimates the cost of this treatment during a few days only at about 50 cents in one case.

In your editorial table of values and cost I noticed:

Loss of time—40 days	$150,000
Expense for nursing, $1 per day	200,000
Medical attendance and medicines at $50 per capita	250,000
Total	$600,000

Now if, according to the above statement, 5,000 persons spend every day 5,000 times 1 cent, i. e., $50, the sum of $630,000 would last for 12,600 days or thirty-eight years, supplying them during that time with water free from bacilli.

According to your editorial table 5,000 persons had to pay during forty days $3.15 per day per capita in order to be cured, and some of them paid with their lives.

The expense of 1 cent per day during a life of thirty-eight years with the safety of a pure drinking water stands thus against the expense of $3.15 per day during forty days, with the possibility of death through poisonous water.

CANTERBURY SLEPT IN WASHINGTON STATION

Reception Committee, Tired Waiting, Went Home to Bed.

PRESIDENT DINED PRELATE

Archbishop Greeted by British Ambassador, Whom He Had Not Seen for Forty Years.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—The Archbishop of Canterbury's day in Washington ended to-night with a dinner in his honor at the White House, at which President and Mrs. Roosevelt were the hosts. The State dining room was used for the occasion, the decorations being pink and white carnations, and covers were laid for twenty-eight. The United States Marine Band, stationed in the main corridor, played during the evening. Among the guests were the British Ambassador, Postmaster General Payne, Secretary of the Interior Hitchcock, Admiral Dewey, Gen. Chaffee, Bishop Doane of Albany, and J. Pierpont Morgan.

The Archbishop slept in the Sixth Street station last night after his arrival on the delayed train which treated him to the novel experience of a smash-up. It was 1:35 when the train pulled in. There was nobody present to welcome the distinguished prelate, the committee charged with that responsibility having gone home early in the evening wearied with undue waiting.

This morning Mr. Warner, the private secretary of Bishop Satterlee, with Chaplain Devries and W. H. Singleton, escorted the Archbishop and his party to the residence of the Bishop of Washington. Those of the party who did not go to the Bishop's residence as his guests were Bishop Doane and his grandson, Doane Gardner, and Mr. Morgan, who have taken apartments at the Arlington Hotel.

Breakfast was served at Bishop Satterlee's residence, and a thanksgiving service was celebrated in the Bishop's private chapel for the escape of the Archbishop and his friends yesterday in the accident. Sir Mortimer Durand, the British Ambassador, who came down from Lenox, was the first caller, and the greetings between the Archbishop and Ambassador were most cordial. Forty years ago they met at the house of a friend in Harrow and spent a Sunday together. They had not seen each other since.

Shortly afterward, Gen. Gillespie, Assistant Chief of Staff, who will be the Archbishop's aide in Washington, called to take him for a drive about the city, during which he pointed out the Capitol, the White House, and the many points of world-wide interest. Among other experiences Gen. Gillespie took the Archbishop to the top of the Washington Monument, where the prelate studied the views from the four windows for a long time, and expressed continual delight at the unique experience.

On the way back to Bishop Satterlee's residence the party called at the White House, and the Bishop was presented to the President. At 4 o'clock he arrived at the Corcoran Art Gallery, and for an hour shook hands with the hundreds who had been invited to meet him. The Archbishop then went to the Satterlee residence and took a nap.

Later he consented to be photographed with Bishop Satterlee and Gen. Gillespie on the steps of the Bishop's home, but he excused himself from participating in an interview, this being an American institution to which he confesses he is unaccustomed and with which he does not desire to be made familiar.

Dean Ellison, speaking for the Archbishop, said: "His Grace is having a delightful time in the United States. He always here until Monday, and is looking forward with great pleasure to the trip to Mount Vernon that day, for he has always been highly interested in Washington and the early history of this country. He goes from here to Philadelphia, New York, and Boston. The Archbishop has been greeted in this country in the most hospitable and friendly manner by all religious bodies. This has been one of the features of the visit."

FOREIGN PRELATES ARRIVING.

Coming for Triennial General Convention of the Episcopal Church.

BOSTON, Sept. 24.—A number of Bishops from abroad who will participate actively in the proceedings of the Triennial General Convention of the Episcopal Church, to be held in this city from Oct. 5 to Oct. 26, have arrived in the United States. Among those who have reached the country are the Right Rev. Charles H. Brent, Bishop of the Philippines; the Right Rev. Henry B. Restarick, Bishop of the Hawaiian Islands; the Right Rev. James H. Van Buren, Bishop of Porto Rico; the Right Rev. Peter T. Rowe, Bishop of Alaska; the Right Rev. Lucien Lee Kinsolving, Bishop of Southern Brazil; the Right Rev. John McKim, Bishop of Tokio, and the Right Rev. S. D. Ferguson, (colored,) Bishop of Cape Palmas, Liberia.

In addition to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Church of England will have as representatives here the Right Rev. William Boyd Carpenter, Lord Bishop of Ripon, and one or two other members of the Anglican Episcopate.

The Anglican Church in Canada will be officially represented by the Right Rev. Charles Hamilton, Lord Bishop of Ottawa; the Right Rev. James Carmichael, Bishop Coadjutor of Montreal, and a number of prominent priests and laymen.

Among the important topics of business to be considered by the House of Bishops and House of Deputies, the legislative bodies of the Church, is the report of the commission which was appointed three years ago to consider the question of changing the legal name of the Church, "Protestant Episcopal," and to ask the opinion of the dioceses. The commission in a report made public last Spring decided against a change at this time.

The agitation for a more explicit and stricter canon on the prohibition of the marriage of divorced persons, except for one cause, will also be discussed at length.

SAYS BOUNTY BILL IS VOID.

Court Rules on Massachusetts Measure for Civil Service Veterans.

BOSTON, Sept. 24.—A decision of the Supreme Judicial Court announced to-day declares the Soldiers' Bounty bill passed by the last Legislature over the Governor's veto unconstitutional. The ground given for the decision is that under the laws of the Commonwealth money raised by taxation may be used only for public purposes, whereas the bounty bill is essentially of a special nature.

The bill, which was passed on the last day of the last legislative session over the Governor's veto, provided for the payment of $125 to every civil war veteran who had not previously received an enlistment bounty from the State.

LIBERTY THEATRE READY.

Opens Soon, Making Seven Playhouses in One Block.

A new theatre, the Liberty, will be opened a week from to-morrow. Its entrance is on Forty-second Street between Seventh and Eighth Avenues. The first attraction will be "The Rogers Brothers in Paris," the production which is now at the New Amsterdam. The two Rogers Brothers have an interest in the Liberty. It will be under the management of Klaw & Erlanger.

In size the Liberty is about the same as the Knickerbocker Theatre. The two balconies are cantilevered, so that there are no posts or obstructions of any kind to annoy the audience. Fireproof materials have been used wherever possible. The skeleton is of steel, and the floors of concrete and tile. There is a powerful sprinkler and standpipe system connected with enormous roof tanks holding 15,000 gallons of water.

The theatre proper is on Forty-first Street, but the main entrance extends through to Forty-second. The Forty-second Street front rises to a height of sixty-five feet. The auditorium is seventy-two feet wide by sixty feet deep, containing a promenade back of the chairs. Spacious marble staircases lead to the balcony. The stage is very large, and possesses up-to-date electrical and mechanical equipment. On the orchestra floor of the Liberty there are 546 chairs.

The mural decorations were designed by Richard Anderson. The domed vestibule, which leads into the foyer, is treated with gold and aluminium. The foyer is toned in ivory. The same color scheme is carried out in the promenade. The plaster ornamentation of the proscenium arch and the boxes is very ornate.

Over the boxes, on each side of the arch, is an eagle surmounting a liberty bell. The men's lounging and smoking room is fitted in old English style, with weathered oak and massive furniture upholstered in Spanish leather.

The Liberty has an elaborate ventilating and heating system. The temperature of the entire house can be raised or lowered in a few minutes to the desired point. The air in the theatre will be entirely changed every five minutes during performances.

The new playhouse will be given over mostly to musical plays, the Rogers Brothers being the chief attraction. But this is not a fixed rule.

When the Liberty and the Lew Fields's theatres are complete, there will be seven theatres on Forty-second Street between Seventh and Eighth Avenues, more than on any other block in New York. They are the Victoria, the Belasco, the Lyric, the New Amsterdam, and the American, besides the two new ones.

JEFFERSON MAY RETIRE.

Actor's Illness Likely to Prevent Further Appearances.

CHICAGO, Sept. 24.—Prof. William Castle, brother-in-law of Joseph Jefferson, has received information regarding the actor's health which indicates an extreme improbability that Jefferson will ever be seen on the stage again.

In a letter to Prof. Castle Mrs. Jefferson says that Mr. Jefferson is very ill, and that she believes he has made his last appearance before the public. All of Mr. Jefferson's engagements have been canceled.

LOUIS FLEISCHMANN, PHILANTHROPIST, LOW

Baker and Friend of Hungry May Be Beyond Recovery.

ESTABLISHED "BREAD LINE"

Had His Own Way of Giving Charity—Was Brave Soldier—Amassed Substantial Fortune.

Louis Fleischmann, the founder of one of the most remarkable charities in the world—"the bread line"—is very low at his home, 4 West Seventy-seventh Street. Mr. Fleischmann has never fully recovered from a paralytic stroke which he suffered two years ago, and his great bakery business at Eighty-first Street and East End Avenue and at Broadway and Tenth Street, where the bread line may be seen every night, was handed over some time ago to his sons, who have been managing it. He was taken seriously ill at his Summer home in the Catskills several weeks ago, and was brought to his home here last week. Since Tuesday last he has been unconscious most of the time, and has suffered several paralytic strokes. His physicians say there is apparently no hope of his recovery.

Louis Fleischmann was as keen in his business ideas as he was versatile in his plans for direct philanthropic work. He has given away a fortune in charity, not alone to the unfortunate men who nightly gather at Tenth Street and Broadway, but by donations of money to individuals, hospitals, and through every branch of charitable institutions. It has been said of him that he heeded to the letter the Biblical injunction not to let his right hand know what his left hand was doing. All of his gifts were bestowed directly; he took no part in organized charity, and once a gift was made he forbade allusion to it by others, and never mentioned the fact himself.

Mr. Fleischmann won distinction in the Austrian army, in which he enlisted as a private, and in which he later became an officer. He was born in Vienna Aug. 18, 1836, and at the outbreak of the Austro-Prussian war, while he was a private in the ranks, he was commissioned a Lieutenant. He displayed remarkable bravery in the battle of Sadowa in 1866. His horse was twice shot from under him, and he rallied his company again and again in a hopeless fight against the Prussians. For this he received two medals from Emperor Franz Josef. His family was well-to-do, and he received a thorough education.

Mr. Fleischmann emigrated to this country in 1874. His brothers had been successful in the business of making compressed yeast, and in connection with this the idea of establishing a bakery, although he knew nothing of baking, came to him. He made his first venture in this direction at the Centennial Exposition, in Philadelphia, where he established the "Vienna Model Bakery," and captured high awards at the Fair for the excellence of his bread and rolls. Then he moved his business to New York, although he still maintains bakeries in Philadelphia and many others of the large cities. In this city the business was a success from the start, and the bakery now covers a large area at East End Avenue and Eighty-first Street.

The bread line is perhaps the most picturesque and one of the best-known charities in the world. The idea of its establishment came to Mr. Fleischmann when he noticed a crowd of hungry tramps standing over the grating at the bakery at Tenth Street and Broadway, scenting the hot loaves that were being turned out in the basement. Mr. Fleischmann offered to feed one of the men, and soon a line formed. It was then that he determined to give bread to every hungry man who would come for it. This was more than ten years ago, and a long time went by until Mr. Fleischmann's family knew anything of his unique charity.

The bread line grew until at night as many as 500 loaves were handed out to the hungry men. "Capt. Henry" and a staff of men were employed to dispense the loaves. In the early days Mr. Fleischmann was on hand every night. He talked to the men in line and sought ways of helping them. In Winter coffee was given with the bread, and when the philanthropist saw a man in line burying off his home with his loaf instead of eating it himself, he had the man followed and aided the family.

Some years ago he formed the plan of establishing a free employment bureau in connection with the bread line. He obtained work for many men, and employers, hearing of his charity, wrote for laborers, so that since that time Capt. Henry has handed out jobs as well as bread and coffee. Only yesterday twenty-two men were directed to positions on the east side through this bureau.

Although Mr. Fleischmann never estimated the number of loaves he gives away every night, the cost aggregates thousands of dollars every year. Every week he sends large donations of bread and cake to the hospitals.

The bread line has been interesting not only on its sociological side, but in its dramatic aspect. Winter and Summer the line is there.

Not a question is asked of the unfortunate who stands in line until 1 o'clock, the distributing hour. The fact that he will stand for hours for his bread is accepted as proof that he is hungry. It is a curious coincidence that the "panhandler" is seldom seen in the line. He does not care for that kind of charity. Many of the men have been stranded in the city and have been driven through sheer necessity into the bread line. Mr. Fleischmann has received many letters from men who said the bread line tided them over when it seemed as if all was lost.

Sociologists and scientific charity dispensers have more than once protested against the bread line. They have written to Mr. Fleischmann to this effect, and have said to him that the idea of feeding men without finding out whether or not they are worthy and whether they make efforts to get work is against all the rules of modern charity. Mr. Fleischmann's invariable reply to these protests was:

"If a man will stand on a curb two or three hours to get a loaf of bread or a few rolls he's hungry. That's enough for me."

It is said that Mr. Fleischmann has provided in his will for the continuation of the bread line. In any event it is not likely that his sons, who have managed the business for years, will discontinue it.

Shortly after coming to this country Mr. Fleischmann was married to Miss Hermann of Brooklyn. He has five children, of whom three are sons. The oldest, Charles Russell Fleischmann, is an attorney, and for years has attended largely to his father's interests. Another son, Otto, devotes all his time to the business.

Mr. Fleischmann's fortune is estimated to be up in the millions.

McADOO ON THE SPOT.

Orders Policeman to Drive Broadway Crowd Away from Wounded Man.

As Police Commissioner McAdoo was going up Broadway last evening he noticed a crowd at the corner of Thirty-third Street, and, elbowing his way through, saw an aged man lying on the sidewalk.

The man was Henry Carpenter, seventy-nine years of age, who lives at 79 Broadway, Flushing. He was struck by Broadway Car No. 2,811, in charge of Motorman George O'Brien. The old gentleman had suffered severe contusions, and was in considerable pain. The Commissioner took charge, saying to Policeman John White of the West Thirtieth Street Station, who was waiting for the ambulance.

"Officer drive this crowd back, so that he can get air to breathe. This dense crowd will suffocate him."

White rapped for assistance and, with the aid of Policeman Diehl of the Broadway Squad, cleared a large circle about the wounded man. Commissioner McAdoo remained beside the wounded man until his removal to New York Hospital.

CORNELL'S FISKE LEGACY.

Rumor Put it at $2,000,000, but Executor Place is Silent.

When Ira A. Place, one of the executors of the will of Daniel Willard Fiske, who died in Germany a week ago, was seen last night at his home, 208 West Seventy-seventh Street, he refused to state the exact amount left by Mr. Fiske to the Cornell University.

It has been rumored that the amount is $2,000,000, but all that Mr. Place would say was:

"You can state that the university has been generously remembered."

Mr. Place stated that the will would be probated the first of the week, and then all the facts would be known. Mr. Fiske left a brother, William O. Fiske, who lives in Jefferson County, N. Y.

ITHACA, N. Y., Sept. 24.—The will of Prof. Willard Fiske was opened and read in New York City to-day by the executors, Ira A. Place and Horatio S. White. President Schurman, representing Cornell University, was present at the reading at the invitation of the executors. Whether or not Cornell receives back the Jennie McGraw Fiske estate by the terms of the will is not known here, since the contents of the document have not as yet been made public.

MRS. MACKAY'S FETE UNQUALIFIED SUCCESS

At Least $5,000 Raised for the Nassau Hospital.

LOTS OF FUN FOR BIG CROWD

Society Men and Women Sell Edibles and Trinkets—Trains Crowded and All Roads Jammed.

For the benefit of a charity dear to her, Mrs. Clarence Mackay threw open the doors of her splendid country home at Harbor Hill, Roslyn, L. I., yesterday to fully five thousand persons, many of whom were her friends, and a great many more she did not know. It was her intention, as she had explained, that the affair was to be in the nature of a fair and lawn fête and that no social barriers should be in evidence.

From the noon hour to 7 o'clock in the evening the trains from New York to Roslyn and from all the small stations on the line were filled with men and women who were going to Harbor Hill to help out in that charity. In addition, the roads were blocked all the afternoon with tally-hos, carriages, and other vehicles, all bound for the same place.

The charity for which Mrs. Mackay did so much is the Nassau Hospital at Mineola. Mr. is the Nassau Hospital at Mineola. Mr. and Mrs. Mackay began helping the institution several years ago, when they presented to the Trustees a substantial stone memorial building in honor of Mr. Mackay's brother. They have added many smaller gifts since.

The liberal and large crowd which attended the fête yesterday will help the hospital to an extent pleasing to the promoters of the benefit. Over 5,000 tickets were sold. At the suggestion of Mrs. Mackay, who sought to put the affair easily within the reach of persons in moderate circumstances, only 25 cents for each ticket was charged at first.

It soon became evident, however, that the number of persons who would respond to the invitations would be so great that even her spacious home would not contain them all, and the tickets were raised to 50 cents. Although the proceeds of the fête were not counted accurately, it was said last evening that at least $5,000 had been raised.

The fête was a success in every way. Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont sold toys, Mrs. Clarence Mackay poured lemonade and cut cake, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., gave charming lectures on the splendor of hats. Outside on the lawn Oliver Belmont and Col. George Harvey sold lemonade.

Other attractions of the fête were the large amphitheatre, tastefully festooned, where during the afternoon the crowd saw the newest sleight-of-hand tricks and the Duchess of Marlborough cart, to which a very small and a very patient donkey was hitched. This little rig was the best-paying attraction of the fête.

The little cart is said to be the identical one in which the Duchess of Marlborough rode when a child. In it sat Misses Bleaker Jay and Cynthia Roche, dressed in Puritan costume. They sold chances for the diminutive rig at $2 a chance. W. Bourke Cockran was a liberal purchaser of chances. After 6 o'clock it was said, had been raised on this little team.

The interior of the spacious residence was filled with flowers. Mrs. Mackay had given over the entire lower floor to the use of the fair. Many pine straw-thatched booths had been erected. In each were women bent upon selling wares. Those in the gypsy tent were all dressed in gypsy costumes, and a corps of nurses from the Nassau Hospital wore fine nurse costumes. Mrs. Mackay wore a nurse's costume herself, her gown being a pale blue and white striped muslin white mull apron, with a fluff of white lace on her head. It was caught by a single large shaded pink rose. Her assistants were in beautiful white Louis XVI. costumes.

Mrs. Pettit, assisted by Mrs. Edward Willets, in Swiss costumes, sold fancy articles. Mrs. George Armstrong, in a Japanese costume, also sold similar articles.

Mrs. Frank Pendleton, in a gorgeous Alsatian costume, assisted by Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., had another fancy article booth, and Mrs. Butler Duncan, Jr., and Mrs. Oliver Bird, in French peasant costumes, sold candy. Miss Ellen Lendgren, in Norwegian costume, raffled on the terrace the fortune telling apparatus of President Roosevelt and Mr. Parker.

During the entire afternoon an orchestra played in the interior balcony of the residence. The salon was given over yesterday to the fortune tellers, who told society women what would befall them in the future.

When the fête was over there was a dinner, followed by a dance at the Meadow Brook Club. Mrs. Oliver Belmont was the hostess.

WAR ON TICKET SPECULATORS.

H. W. Savage Has Negroes with Megaphones Warn "College Widow" Patrons

Two big-lunged negroes with megaphones were stationed last night outside of the Garden Theatre, where "The College Widow" is playing, to warn people against the ticket speculators. Henry W. Savage had decided to put up a fight against the men who sell tickets on the curb and to make a test case in the courts, if necessary. There were some lively doings when the doorman refused to admit ticket holders because they had got their tickets from speculators.

The two negroes stood up on cabs. The megaphones were large, and what the negroes said could be heard two blocks off. Finally the ticket speculators began to get angry. They called the negroes bad names and threatened to kill them if they didn't quit yelling. But there were plenty of policemen standing around, and the two men employed by Mr. Savage kept up their noise.

Mr. Savage, manager, is the first to make any such determined stand against them. Daniel Frohman instituted a war against them at Daly's last year and had detectives walking up and down the sidewalk trying to spot out the people who bought their tickets, so that they might be pointed out to the doorman inside. He made it pretty hot for the speculators, but it was impossible to put an end entirely to a business legalized by the city. The speculators have been having an "easy thing" with "The College Widow" on account of its popularity.

EX-MAYOR EDSON DEAD.

Began Successful Career as a Country School Teacher.

Ex-Mayor Franklin Edson died yesterday morning at his home, 42 West Seventy-first Street. Mr. Edson was seventy-three years old, and his death came after a year's illness following a general break-down. At the deathbed were his three sons, Dr. David Orr Edson, Franklin Edson, Jr., and Robert Stuart Edson, and his two daughters, Mrs. Willis Bonner of Tarrytown, N. Y., and Mrs. Arthur H. Van Brunt.

Mr. Edson was born in Chester, Vt., April 5, 1832, and was descended from Puritan stock. He won his early education by working through the Summer on a farm and studying through the Winter until he was able to teach school. When he was twenty years old he joined his brother Cyrus in business at Albany. He was markedly successful, and was married in 1856 to Fanny C. Wood, a granddaughter of Jethro Wood, inventor of the cast-iron plow. Mr. Edson made a fortune during the civil war, and it was then that he began his charitable activities on the scale on which they were continued until the end of his life. He became the head of the grain commission firm of Edson, Orr & Chamberlain, and came to New York in 1886, the firm moving here. It was later known as Franklin Edson & Co.

Mr. Edson was President of the Produce Exchange in 1868, 1873, and 1874. He took great pride in being the inaugurator of the movement to build the present Produce Exchange building, and was head of the commission which had active charge of its building. He was a close student of the methods of transportation and grading, and many of the regulations now employed for the grading of grain were adopted at his suggestion. He was credited with abolishing tolls on the State railroads.

His election to the Mayoralty in 1882, in the year that Grover Cleveland became Governor, was a seven days' wonder in the political world. Always a Democrat, he had openly fought Tammany Hall. Threatened by an independent movement against Tammany, John Kelly agreed to the nomination of Mr. Edson, and he was elected. Among the events of his administration were the award of contracts for the new Croton aqueduct, the establishment of many parks, the completion of the Brooklyn Bridge, and an act for the building of new armories.

For twenty-five years ex-Mayor Edson was a Vestryman of St. James's Episcopal Church in Fordham, and also of St. Paul's in Albany. The funeral services are to be held at his home Monday morning, and the interment will be in the Rural Cemetery, Albany. The Produce Exchange adopted resolutions concerning Mr. Edson's death at a meeting yesterday afternoon.

Ex-Mayors now living are Edward Cooper, Seth Low, Robert A. Van Wyck, Hugh J. Grant, and Thomas Gilroy.

WENT ON VISIT, IS HELD.

Woman Who Lives in Ohio Detained at Ellis Island.

Apolonia Rolicsky, who arrived here Sept. 12 on the Red Star steamer Finland, was yesterday ordered deported, notwithstanding the fact that she has lived in this country for a number of years and went back to her home in Hungary only last June for a visit.

She has taken an appeal from the decision of the Ellis Island Board of Special Inquiry, and Special Inspector Marcus Braun has indorsed her appeal, with a strong recommendation that the decision be reversed.

She got her ticket to go to Hungary from an agent at Akron, Ohio, her home. He gave her a letter of credit. Her husband and two children followed her. When she reached the other side she found that her letter of credit had been canceled. A dispute over the reason has arisen since. Her husband was detained on the other side because he had contracted trachoma. When she returned she had very little money, although she says she has plenty at Akron.

NO PUBLIC CLOTHES-BRUSHING

That Constitutes Disorderly Conduct, One Policeman Holds.

Isaac Weiner of 12 Broome Street, an assistant foreman of the Street Cleaning Department, was knocked down by an automobile at Forty-second Street and Broadway last evening. The owner and driver of the machine, Herman Hein of 1,678 Broadway, after learning that Weiner's injuries were slight, offered him $5 as a balm for his injuries, and Weiner accepted it.

Then Weiner started to brush his clothes off. A big crowd collected and Patrolman Getzer of the West Forty-seventh Street Station ordered Weiner to move on. Weiner said he would when he had finished brushing his clothes. Getzer then arrested him on a charge of disorderly conduct.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—A disturbance that has been moving slowly over the extreme North during the past three days increased considerably in intensity and velocity of movement after reaching the upper lakes, and during the last twenty-four hours has caused general rains from the Missouri and Upper Mississippi Valleys eastward, except in the Middle Atlantic States. There were also some high winds along the lower lakes and the New England coast. In the slope and plateau region the weather has been generally fair, while rain continued in the Pacific States. Temperatures have risen considerably in the Middle Atlantic States and New England, and have fallen in the Missouri and Upper Mississippi Valleys.

There will be showers Sunday in New England, the Middle Atlantic States, the Upper Ohio Valley, the greater portion of the lower lake region, and Montana, and showers Monday in the Northwest; elsewhere from the plateau region eastward the weather will be generally fair Sunday and Monday, except in Southeastern Florida, where showers will continue. It will be cooler Sunday in New England, the north portion of the Middle Atlantic States, the lake region, and the Upper Ohio Valley and warmer in northern slopes. It will be warmer Monday in the central valleys and the lake region, and cooler in the Northwest.

Storm warnings are displayed on the lower lakes, on the Atlantic Coast from New York to Eastport, and on the California Coast from San Francisco

A Study of the Battlefield and the Opposing Forces.

INDICATIONS OF A CONTEST

Among Them Are Union Pacific's Rise, Western Pacific Revival, and Struggle Over Alton.

Kuhn-Loeb are buying more U. P. common."

"So? And what of the general list?"

"Shaky."

It is a bit of conversation that might have been heard in any broker's office in Wall Street last Tuesday, or on many an other day in the recent past, without attracting more than passing atention. If one asked the thorough-going bull what it meant, he would reply:

"Oh, they are takin gadvantage of the natural rise in U. P. to sell the list on stories of Rockefeller-Harriman war and a contest for control."

An equally thoroughgoing bear would have ready tales of the same contest, with a wealth of detail quite convincing, unless the bull happened to be around to refute him.

Thus Whll Street hears the rumbling of great financial conflicts always. It matters very little for present purposes whether the buying of Union Pacific last Tuesday and on the succeeding days was for Harriman account through the banking house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., his accredited representatives, or was for St. Paul "interests," which means nothing else than 26 Broadway. Reports had it, and have it still, that the struggle between the two great camps has begun and that the buying of Union Pacific has been for defense on the one side and offense on the other. In that event the "general list" may well be unsettled, for the effects of such a war, if the stage of compromise were once passsed would be far-reaching even to the widest limits of the financial and railroad world.

Were the battle once joined, were it definitely known that the Rockefeller-Gould combination of railroad interests proposed to squeeze E. H. Harriman out of the control of Union Pacific and to capture thereby the all-important link in the great transcontinental system of which he is the head, the rumbling now heard in the Street, in the competitive buying of Union Pacific common, would change to a roar that would drown out every other sound in financialdom, and would reverberate until the very foundations of things shook—or until the defeated party resigned such of his claims to territory in dispute as the victor might demand.

So it is very important and interesting to examine the evidences from which Wall Street has been able up to the present time to draw its opinions.

The immediate method of attack may perhaps best be considered first, and the fact recalled that the Union Pacific Road—the importance of which to the Harriman system has already been hinted at and will be pointed out later on, the subjoined map—has an issue of bonds which may be converted into common stock any time up to May 1, 1906. It is an important issue, although at present not many people care to make the exchange. This is because it carries a loss in the market value of the securities of something like $40 on a $1,000 bond, the common stock selling around 101 and the bonds around 105. But if the common stock were enhanced in value by any means, such as an increased dividend, the bond conversion would become profitable by exactly the number of points that the bonds were below the stock.

Then, if many people sought to get the profit and converted their bonds, it would be necessary to go into the market and buy a proportional amount of this stock in order to keep the control of the road where it is at present. That process, figured on the basis of the number of bonds which might be converted, would cost about $40,000,000. It may be said, then, that Mr. Harriman or any one else controlling the Union Pacific Road and proposing to keep such control, has got to have his purpose just $40,000,000 strong if the bond conversion ever becomes general. So when argument is put up to him, as it is accepted that it has been in the past few weeks or months, that the Union Pacific was earning enough to pay a five instead of a four per cent. dividend on its common stock, it may be supposed that Mr. Harriman, or his representative, combated them with whatever vigor of speech represented his conception of $40,000,000.

The people who are supposed to know have it that when these answers were made to dividend suggestions Mr. Harriman, or his representative, was invited to study a large wall map of the United States, considering particularly the country around Everet, South Dakota, and a little place called Marysville, in Utah, the terminus of an insignificant line running up to Salt Lake City. Then, if the Standard Oil representative happened to have a long pointer handy, he drew the point, in the first instance, in a sweeping curve down from Everet through the gap in the Rocky Mountains where the Union Pacific goes through and up along the route followed by the Oregon Short Line to Portland, Oregon, or to Seattle, in Washington If he was emphasizing the importance of Marysville, the pointer traveled straight across Nevada and California to San Francisco.

What the Harriman man replied at such a time as this does not appear. But it is quite possible to follow out his thoughts, directed, as they were, by the representations of great railroad systems now in operation, and by the chief physical characteristic of the western third of the United States—the Rocky Mountains. One may go, then, to the map which is printed herewith to get a general idea of this tremendous transcontinental situation. The map is constructedto show the principal competing through lines which have a bearing on the controversy between the Harriman interests and the Rockefeller interests. As many routes as do not affect the principal issue have been eliminated, only two roads outside the camps in question being included. These are the Rock Island, or the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, or the Atchison, as it is known for short. And in the case of both of these systems, their Southern connections, opening up an entire new set of competitive possibilities in themselves, like the Southern connections of the Rockefeller-Gould railroads, have not been traced.

One may begin, then, with the northernmost road in the United States. It is the Great Northern, suggesting by its very name the rugged, picturesque old man who is now its controlling genius, as he was with the genius of its very being. James J. Hill's relation to the two antagonistic railway camps with which we have most to do is an interesting one. His position is in a sense one of detachment, for he has his own railroad quite apart from the system that was going to be represented by the Northern Securities Company, and anything that builds up the territory in which his faith and his investment have at once been pinned, as a northerly line to Seattle will do, will necessarily make more business for his road, as well as for everybody else.

In other words, "Jim" Hill's belief in the great Northwest is considerably stronger than his apprehension of the muss that might be stirred up even by the struggle of men thought veritable giants by folk whose vision is confined by walls of brick and stone.

He said as much a day or so ago when reports of Union Pacific buying reached him somewhere out along his system.

"Let 'em build to Seattle. It'll develop the country, and that's what we're all looking for."

Of course through the Northern Securities project in its present complications, involved in the dispute between Mr. Hill and Mr. Harriman over the terms of the divorcement of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Roads, the former is more or less intimately interested in anything that affects the fortunes of the latter's systems as making Mr. Harriman more or less likely to pursue his purpose of getting back from Northern Securities the same Northern Pacific stock that he put into it. Mr. Hill no doubt would like to have the flank attack of the Rockefeller-Gould lines to the southward force a surrender in the north. Such a surrender means the acquisition by the Hill party of a substantial interest in Northern Pacific, perhaps enough to be made the basis one day of a struggle for control and the relinquishment of an amount of Great Northern stock not of sufficient importance to disturb existing conditions of domination at all. But that is somewhat afield from the topic at hand.

On the accompanying map, the Hill-Harriman systems, the Atchison, and the Wisconsin Central—the latter affording a connection with the Northern Pacific and Great Northern Roads east of the Burlington Road—are indicated by a solid black line. The Harriman-Rockefeller lines, with the Chicago and Northwestern and the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha, are shown by the alternating vertical and horizontal lines. The Gould-Rockefeller systems are indicated by crosses, and the Rock Island system by a broken line.

It should be remembered, however, about the designations of the several roads shown that just as "Hill-Harriman" is seen in the present instance not to include actual common ownership, or even necessarily absolute control, so the terms "Harriman-Rockefeller" or "Rockefeller-Gould" do not always mean complete ownership or control by the particular individuals whose names happen so to be joined. The idea is, rather, that the interests by which any group of roads are spoken of are those dominant in the system and generally quite in control of the principal line or lines.

The course of the Hill-Harriman roads from Portland, Ore., in the case of the Northern Pacific, and from the Canadian border north of Fair Haven, in that of the Great Northern) is in virtually parallel, and, as the Supreme Court has held, competing, lines. At Billings, Mon., the Burlington and Missouri River runs off, down through Wyoming and Nebraska into Lincoln and Omaha, there to connect with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, which completes the connection to Chicago. Far to the northward the roads follow along their parallel course into Duluth and St. Paul, there connecting with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy again, as well as with the Chicago Great Western for their lower entry on the lakes. It is a system tremendously interesting in its possibilities, but save as the general Harriman interests are its interests, it is not so immediately concerned with the Harriman-Rockefeller situation until such time as a Standard Oil road actually reaches a seaport in the extreme Northwest.

Starting in the same northwestern corner, with the line of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, connecting with that of the Southern Pacific at Portland, one comes on to a system immediately in a position to feel the effects of competition like that proposed. The Oregon Short Line from the North and Northwest and the Southern Pacific from San Francisco are the arms which reach out to the Pacific Coast and are controlled through stock ownership by the Union Pacific, which they meet around the Great Salt Lake, where the Southern Pacific has built the wonderful cut-off.

The next interesting point is where the Union Pacific traverses the Rocky Mountains, coming into Cheyenne and running thence east in one line to the Missouri River at Omaha, where connection is had with the Chicago and Northwestern a Vanderbilt line, into Chicago, and thence north to St. Paul, Minneapolis, and the Northern lake points. A second connecting line here is the Chicago, St. Paul, Milwaukee and Omaha, controlled by the Chicago and Northwestern, which for present purposes may be traced from St. Paul down to meet the Union Pacific at Columbus. The second line of the Union Pacific from Denver east may be followed through Topeka and Kansas City into St. Louis.

This Union Pacific system, of so great historic as well as commercial interest, with its network of branches and connections, represents the defending army in the battle for which the hosts are arrayed. Its very magnitude affords the greater number of opportunities for attack. There is first the contest for control of the Union Pacific Road itself, the line that may be likened to the vitals of the whole organism, of which the attempt to force a higher dividend that has been recounted is but a single phase, and the reported heavy purchases of common for the accounts of William Rockefeller and Henry H. Rogers, another.

The same sort of operations, varied somewhat to meet contingencies as they arise, may be conducted in any one of the connecting lines. The fight, or pretense of fight, for the control of the Chicago and Alton, which affords a valuable Chicago connection for the Southern area of the Union Pacific, but lately in the public attention through dispatches from Chicago that Mr. Harriman now had sufficient proxies to risk issuing the call for the annual meeting, is another stage of the attack.

A move in reply might easily have been the acquisition on Friday, as market stories had it, by Pennsylvania Railroad interests, not so long ago in open warfare with 26 Broadway, of the large block of Atchison common held by Kuhn, Loeb & Co. The Atchison system is not represented on the map south of Trinidad, Col., because it is not definitely involved in the Harriman-Standard Oil dispute as yet, by other than rumor, and does not afford an important connection for the systems concerned, as do the Chicago, Northwestern and Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha.

But if the Atchison were transferred from the class of comparative independents, either because the Kuhn-Loeb holdings had been turned over to the Pennsylvania, or because the Rockefellers had "shaken" them out of the banking house, as another story put it last Friday, it would become the basis for another very pretty contest in its line from Santa Fé through to the Pacific Coast, would afford a Southern parallel for the proposed Western Pacific in the event of its control passing into hands hostile to 26 Broadway, or a basis for more keen competition with the Harriman Southern Pacific Road, if the Rockefellers succeeded in "shaking down" enough of the stock to control the Atchison themselves.

Another system represented in part on the map because its location places it somewhat in the same category with the Atchison, is the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, running west to Pueblo and southwest to El Paso, Texas. This, with the Atchison and the Southern and Southwestern connections of the Harriman and Rockefeller systems, offers a further field for study, but one that is not definitely involved—as yet—in the existing differences.

Developments on all of these lines may have been recounted by the Standard Oil man when he swept his pointer across the map from Everet to Seattle and from Marysville to San Francisco.

Or perhaps nothing was said about them and many other developments, because the time was not then ripe for disclosing the objective point against which the next assault would be hurled. The most interesting part of his dissertation, however, was that which had to do with the possibilities of new Far Western competition of a kind that could be clearly demonstrated by reference to the termini of existing railroads and points to which proposed lines might be built. So it is necessary next to see what these termini may be.

The Denver and Rio Grande may be picked up on the map in the Salt Lake country in Utah, affording the entry to Marysville, whence the Western Pacific may be built. It is the Denver and Rio Grande into Trinidad, Pueblo, Colorado Springs, and Denver, and then the Colorado and Southern, paralleling the line of the Union Pacific, Denver and Gulf north to Cheyenne and Fairbank. From Pueblo east the Missouri Pacific runs, a Gould or Gould-Rockefeller line, making its way into Kansas City, and finally St. Louis, whence the Wabash, all important in the Eastern lines of the Gould system, which has come down from Omaha, meets it and takes up the traffic into Chicago and to the Atlantic seaboard.

Then, finally, one comes to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the strongest Rockefeller system of them all, market leaders and aristocrat among the railroads. Running from Chicago to Kansas City, to Omaha, to St. Paul, and to Minneapolis, with innumerable cross and connecting lines, a few of which are indicated on the map, it holds firmly in its grasp some of the richest country in the Union. And it is the Northwestern terminus of this giant system that one sees at Everet and at Chamberlain on the Missouri River, the proposed starting points for the competing line through the Rockies and into the extreme Northwest. The project here is, to be sure, not so far advanced as that of the Western Pacific, and the distance yet to be traveled for a Pacific connection is many times greater, but with the potential might of the railroad itself and the hundreds of millions behind it, it is no less a menace to any system against which it may one day be turned.

So one has canvassed hastily the competitive possibilities of the through transcontinental traffic.

And the traveler comes finally back to Wall Street, whence he started, back to the ticker that tells what the big men's brokers are doing on the floor of the Exchange, and to the Directors' rooms and banking rooms where the battles are planned and the orders sent to the thousands of troops in the field. Here also much of the fighting is done; here, on many of the systems, is made the show of hands in conference which is just as sure indication of strength as actual physical possession of the properties themselves. The significance of this move or that—the entrance of Edwin Hawley, bitter enemy of E. H. Harriman, into the Board of Directors of the Western Pacific—is not at all appreciated, unless one knows the intricate network of affiliations of the men who make up the financial community. But to the knowing ones it is quite as significant as the buying of Union Pacific for Harriman or Rockefeller account.

Yet one must not stay always in the banking or board room, neither at the ticker tape, for if he does he will run the risk of believing that Wall Street and its men constitute the real, the creative force. At times it appears as though this were so. In the boom years of the opening century, when fortunes were making overnight, men enthroned finance, forgetting industry; systems arose, methods of creating apparent values not dreamed of before, values which might change to actual wealth if converted in time, but which, in their very great shrinking, brought untold misery when natural conditions reasserted themselves.

And in this reassertion of natural conditions, the restoration of industry to its place beside finance in public esteem, the men who had profited through it all were those who had remembered the rational relation all the time. While they and others laid snares for the unwary in the name of finance, they had their further vision away from the Street, on the mines and the forests, the wheat fields, and the cotton belt. They knew that these were the primary source of wealth, and that those who created values of time and place, great as they were, could confer no valuable service at all unless there were commodities with which they might work.

In thinking of the success of any railroad or set of railroads, therefore, the real place to form one's judgment is out in the country that the line is going to serve. Will the Rockefeller extensions be successful? The first, the Western Pacific, is evidently but the completion of a line already far enough across the continent to have demonstrated its success. For the second, continuing the system of the St. Paul Road to the Pacific, one may perhaps go to the words of the grizzled old railroad man of the Northwest: "Let 'em build to Seattle," says "Jim" Hill; "it'll develop the country, and that's what we're all looking for."

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

French Wine Imported Through Canada Must Pay Full Duty.

In a decision written by General Appraiser Eugeno G. Hay, the Board of United States General Appraisors yesterday overruled a protest by Michael Brothers of St. Paul against the assessment of $1.60 a case on an importation of wine from Montreal. The importers set up that the wine was a product of France, and was entitled to the benefits of the French reciprocity agreement. The testimony showed that the wine had been purchased from A. E. Mellette & Co. of Montreal, and a member of this firm testified that it was bought by them in Bordeaux and merely transshipped at Montreal.

No Bordeaux invoice was produced, and Mr. Hay decides that while the wine was undoubtedly of French origin it must, in the absence of proper proof to the contrary, be considered as having entered into and mingled with the commerce of Canada, and thus forfeited the benefits of the reciprocity agreement with France.

Protests overruled yesterday were by Meyer Jonasson & Co., Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne, Jules & Hugo Rosenberg, Hensel Bruckmann & Loerscher, Samuel & Hilder Brothers, the Oil Seeds Pressing Company, the Acker, Merrall & Condit Company, Santo Chieraro, and Zinkeisen & Co., New York; Charles H. Wyman & Co., St. Louis; Kwong Sang Wa, Portland, Ore., and P. M. Gettrick, Burlington, Vt.

Protests sustained were by Julius Wile Brothers & Co. and others, (2) and Fischer & Co., New York; the National Express Company, Plattsburg, N. Y., and William H. Nasson, Baltimore.

IN THE BUSINESS WORLD

Raisin Trust Now Controls Entire California Output.

It Will Now Undertake a Crusade Against the Splitting of Commissions by Brokers.

It was announced yesterday in the wholesale dried fruit market that the Consolidated Seeded Raisin Company was now in virtual control of the entire output of seeded raisins in California, and that it had undertaken a crusade against the splitting of commissons by brokers, which, it was alleged, did much to demoralize the raisin market last season.

The commission allowed brokers last year was 5 per cent., but many of them gave 4 per cent. to their customers, and in some cases, it is said, so keen was the competition that brokers sacrificed all their commissions. This year the commission has been cut by the Consolidated Company to 2½ per cent., and it threatens a further cut if any evidence is found that this is being divided.

J. K. Armsby of the J. K. Armsby Company, which is one of the largest concerns in the Consolidated Company, said yesterday that if the brokers evidenced a desire to work for 1 per cent. the commission would be cut to that figure. He also declared that in his opinion there would be no further reduction in the price of raisins, and that the export trade with Europe was promising to be very good.

NEW YORKS TOO MUCH FOR THE PITTSBURGS

McGraw's Men Play Vigorous Game and Win by 3 to 1.

MATHEWSON IN GREAT FORM

Brooklyn Beaten Twice by Chicago—Rain Stops Contest in American League.

The New York National League team showed a marked reversal of form yesterday over its display in the first game with Pittsburg, and the champions in consequence suffered defeat by the score of 3 to 1. Mathewson contributed largely to the victory, the four base hits off him being made by two men. Brooklyn played a double-header with Chicago and lost both games, and Boston was treated the same by the Cincinnatis. At Philadelphia the Quakers and St. Louis team divided the honors. In the American League rain interfered with all the games scheduled with the exception of the one at Chicago, in which the Athletics were shut out. Summary follows:

NATIONAL LEAGUE.

New Yorks Play Like Champions and Beat Pittsburg 3 to 1.

The champion Pittsburgs found the New York team of yesterday an entirely different aggregation from the one they met on the previous day, and in place of a seven to nothing victory they were outplayed at all points of the game, and lost by a score of 3 to 1. The all-around display of the New Yorks was of the high order that had just won for them the championship for 1905, but the man who was chiefly responsible for the team's success was Mathewson. Only two Pittsburg players were able to solve his delivery, and they made the four hits credited to their team. One of these, a home run by Beaumont, was a lucky stroke, for Donlin made a splendid effort to catch the ball on the fly, but his failure resulted in the ball rolling to the fence. Steadiness was a conspicuous feature of Mathewson's pitching, and in the seventh inning he performed the rather difficult feat of striking out Wagner, who is considered the league's premier batsman, and followed this up by treating the next two men in the same way. He received almost perfect support in the field, a bad throw by Warner to second being the only error charged to the local men.

The Pittsburgs presented as a battery Robertaille and Rafter, who were secured from the Troy Club of the New York State League. Robertaille showed unusual speed for a little fellow, and, while he kept the New York hits down to six, a base on balls and two brief batting spurts enabled the New Yorks to win. The champions also played well in the field, McCormick allowing a ball to pass him being the only error.

Mathewson hit safely in the third inning, and Donlin reached first on called balls. Then Browne hit to McCormick, who fumbled the ball, and two men scored. In the fourth inning Dahlen led off with a two-base hit, was sacrificed to third, and scored on Gilbert's single. Only one Pittsburg runner had reached third base up to the sixth inning, when, after two were out, Beaumont made his home-run hit to left field. The score:

CINCINNATI WON TWICE.

BOSTON, Sept. 24.—Cincinnati won a double-header from Boston to-day by scores of 5 to 3 and 8 to 4. Seymour's outfielding in the first game was brilliant. Several times he made difficult running catches with opponents on bases. Boston played a wretched fielding game in the second contest, which was called because of darkness at the end of six innings. SQUADRON A WINS IN POLO.

New Haven Freebooters Beaten in Close Match at Van Cortlandt.

Squadron A and the New Haven Freebooters played an interesting polo game yesterday at Van Cortlandt Park, the honors going to the local team by 7 goals to 6. Owing to the inability of the New Haven men to send its entire team for the scheduled match in the Squadron tournament, the regular match for the Van Cortlandt cups will be played next Saturday. Rathborne and Stoddard were the only New Haven Club members, and the other places were filled by Squadron men. The visitors were allowed two goals by handicap, and they made four. The Hunt brothers and Douglas did the winning work for the Squadron, making a number of long runs down the field, while Neilson was a very accurate hitter. The New Haven players maintained the lead until the second period was finished. The third period was the most closely contested portion of the match, Rathbone, who played in the leading position for New Haven, scoring the only goal.

There was a large crowd present, and although disappointed in not seeing the regular match, the spectators saw a very clever exhibition of polo. The Squadron coach made the run to the grounds from the Hotel Savoy. It was driven by Alfred Rutgers, Jr., and among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Parsons, Dr. and Mrs. J. M. de Bermingham, Mrs. R. S. Larned, A. D. Shepard, Jr., E. J. Fenlon, J. M. Callaway, and Dr. F. D. Bowne. A number of automobiles were lined up on the east side of the field, and Miss Morosini drove her three-horse team to the grounds. The line-up and score:

VINGT-ET-UN IL WINS GOLD CHALLENGE CUP

Vanderbilt's Auto Boat Breaks Down in the Hudson River.

ROUGH WATER FOR FINAL RACE

Hamilton Steers the Winning Boat—Macaroni Burned and Only Five Starters Complete the Course.

W. S. Kilmer's fast auto boat the Vingt-et-Un II., which Mr. Kilmer purchased during the Summer for use at his country home in the Thousand Islands, won another notable victory yesterday by finishing first in the third and last race for the Gold Challenge Cup offered through the American Power Boat Association. This victory gave the owner possession of the valuable trophy until six months, at least, when challenges may be received for the cup. Mr. Kilmer entered the boat from the Chippewa Yacht Club, in the St. Lawrence. He was present at the Columbia Yacht Club, foot of West Eighty-sixth Street, yesterday and saw his boat win. C. M. Hamilton, who steered the boat throughout the season, handled the craft, and, although the weather conditions were far more severe than on the preceding day, he made almost as good time and won by a big margin.

All of the ten boats that originally entered for the event when the first contest was held on Thursday started, but not all were fortunate enough to get back to the club. It was a severe test for the frail, high-powered craft, for a stiff southeast wind was blowing that caurned up big white-capped waves out in the river, while reports from the five boats that finished stated that the river above Yonkers resembled the open sea.

W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.'s, boat, the Mercedes VI., which won the first race when sailed by her owner in fast time, met with more trouble yesterday. Mr. Vanderbilt was not present. The boat lost over six minutes in getting across the line, for, although close by, something was wrong with the machinery. When she reached One Hundred and Fifty-first Street the boat broke down, her motor failing to work with regularity, and she put into a nearby dock. H. A. Lozier's Shooting Star, the challenging boat from the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club, broke her clutch after running for seven minutes and was towed to a neighboring dock. The worst misfortune of all befell the Macaroni, entered by C. H. Tangeman of the Atlantic Yacht Club and steered yesterday by William Wallace. When off Dobbs Ferry the boat caught fire and was abandoned by the two men managing it. When word to this effect was brought to the club, there was considerable consternation among the auto boat enthusiasts. The Josephine and the Challenger did not finish.

Although little was to be seen of the actual race, the Riverside Park embankment overlooking the club was crowded with spectators for an hour before the start, and as each of the puffing boats went off loud cheers greeted the progress of the racers up the river. Few of the crowd, however, remained to watch the finish. Both the Vingt-et-Un and the Speedway showed admirable seagoing qualities. In fact, for some of the boats it was absolutely impossible to race. Vanderbilt's boat, for instance, while a fast one in quiet water, offers practically no resistance to a small sea and rapidly fills with water. Had the water been like glass throughout the three races, the result might have been different.

For the future utility of motor boating it is well that a good all-around test was given, for unless pleasure craft can stand the water of the Hudson as it was yesterday and the preceding day, there would not be much pleasure in owning a motor boat.

The Vingt-et-Un made a splendid spectacle above the clubhouse as she came down to cross the finishing line. The water faintly flew from her sides in long, steam-cut volumes, and was thrown high in the air like a fountain. The course, which was said to be 32 knots, despite various criticisms to the contrary, was covered by the winning boat in 1 hour 30 minutes 24 seconds, giving the excellent average of 21.24 knots per hour, or 24.43 statute miles, only a shade poorer than she did on the two preceding days. Her designer, Clinton H. Crane, was particularly pleased with her excellent showing. With the additional ten points that the victory gave her, the Vingt-et-Un finished the series of three races with a total of 25 points.

Charles L. Seabury's Speedway was the second boat, scoring a total of 21 points. She made excellent time, doing the course in 1 hour 45 minutes and 37 seconds, and H. L Bowden's Mercedes, U. S. A., was third with 19 points. The Flip, owned by C. H. Holmes of Hartford, scored 18 points, and the Marcirene II. got 14 points.

The cup was formerly held by the Columbia Yacht Club, having been won last June by the Standard, which has since been sold and is now in the St. Lawrence. At that time there were only two competitors. The interest in motor boating, as shown by the increased number of starters in the recent events, is clearly growing, and preparations are being made to build several fast boats for racing next year.

The Mercedes VI., Mercedes, U. S. A., and Macaroni were protested on the score of measurements, and new measurements were ordered by the committee, although in the case of the Macaroni such action is now unnecessary. The summary:

Boat and Owner.	Start.	Finish.	Elapsed Time.
Vingt-et-Un II., W. S. Kilmer	3:24:00	4:54:24	1:30:24
Speedway, C. L. Seabury	3:14:57	5:00:34	1:45:37

LOVING CUP FOR J. T. BRUSH.

New York Baseball Players Give Testimonial to President.

John T. Brush, President of the New York Baseball Club, received a handsome loving cup from the members of the team during the game between the New York and Pittsburg teams at the Polo Grounds yesterday. The presentation was made in front of the grand stand and just before the New Yorks went to the bat in the second inning.

The cup is about fourteen inches in height. On one side is this inscription: "Presented to John T. Brush as a token of esteem by the players of the New York Ball Club of the National League, Sept. 24, 1904." On the reverse side are the names of nineteen players in two rows, also the names of Fred. M. Knowles, Secretary of the club, and Harry Stevens, the score-card man.

Keene Sale of Hunters an Innovation.

The sale of Foxhall P. Keene's hunting establishment, horses and hounds, announced for next Thursday at Van Tassel & Kearney's, is a distinct departure in this country and has aroused great interest among the hunting people, the offering being one of a character such as in England would draw sportsmen from every part of the country. The horses have been ridden continually, and represent the careful selection for a number of years, in both England and America, of an expert horseman and enthusiastic hunting man who spared no expense to collect for his own use the very best on the market. There will be no additions to the sale, the horses all being of the stock of the Keene stable of hunters and the cream of the hunting fields of Great Britain, and the best that could be bred at the Keene Farm, Castleton, near Lexington, Ky.—thoroughbreds that are perfect in schooling, well-mannered, and up to heavy weights. The hounds were specially selected by Mr. Keene, after several years of hunting in England and Ireland, from the best packs in Great Britain, and from all promise there will be sharp competition for the dogs by the hunt clubs about the larger cities of the East.

BELDAME PROVED HER TITLE TO CHAMPIONSHIP

Great Filly Cantered in Front All the Way for Second Special.

BROOMSTICK WAS SECOND

Big Crowd Witnessed the Running of Mile-and-a-Half Race at the Gravesend Track.

Beldame, cantering in front from the first jump to the last of the mile-and-a half race for the Second Special Stakes at the Gravesend track yesterday, dissipated any doubts that may have lingered in the minds of racegoers as to her right to the title of turf champion of 1904. A more convincing victory could not be possible, for never once in the contest was the great three-year-old filly extended, and, with her field beaten and straggling a half mile from the winning post, Beldame romped out the distance and finished fresh and strong, eager even then to go on further.

The hollow style in which the champion won made the race a rather tame spectacle, but the merit of her performance was the more pronounced on that account, and marked one of the most remarkable triumphs of the filly's sensational career, as she ran with her full weight up, and conceded five pounds each to the best horses that the season's racing has left in training.

The race was the fourth on the Gravesend programme, and was the feature of the afternoon and the attraction that swelled the attendance to the largest of the Gravesend Fall meeting. The weather was clear and warm and the track faster and better than it has been since the opening day, when the big event was run, but even with the conditions so favoring the horses the time was not remarkably fast, as Beldame had her opponents beaten so surely early in the contest that there was no occasion for her to show her speed.

Only four horses ran, Beldame having the top weight under the scale with her 112 pounds, which included five pounds' penalty for her success in the First Special on Monday, while the colt Broomstick ran with 110 pounds and the two older horses, McChesney and Africander, each had up 121 pounds.

Throughout the betting Beldame was favorite at odds on, the opening price against her being 1 to 2, a price which did not tempt much support, as good as Beldame has proved herself to be, bettors fearing to bet against her, still were shy about backing a filly three years old to give weight to horses and beat them over a mile-and-a-half course. The result was that Beldame went up a shade in the betting and started at 11 to 20, the real speculation on the race being between the three others for the place. At post time Africander and McChesney were equal second choices, while Broomstick was the outsider at a price only a shade longer than was laid against the older horses. Beldame went to the post looking as fresh and fiery as when she made her first appearance of the season away back in April, and so much in the humor of running that she tugged against the hold of the groom, who, following the custom with the filly, led her to the starting post several minutes in advance of the other horses, Beldame being excused from the usual parade. O'Neil, who rode her, kept her walking about at the post until the trio opposed to her joined her, the four lining up for the start then with McChesney on the rail, Broomstick next to him, and Beldame on the outside.

There was a brief delay before the barrier was lifted, Beldame then going out to the front in the first bound, and the others trailing out behind her, with Africander second and Broomstick, a little slow to move, last. The start was made close to the far turn, and Beldame, swinging over in the first strides, took the rail and the track at once, and went on clear of Africander, while Burns on Broomstick hustled the colt forward and on the turn, moved past McChesney and took a place lapped on Africander, these two then following the pace set by the filly and three lengths away into the quarter stretch, and holding their same places for the full circuit of the track, Africander never being more than a half length ahead of Broomstick from the head of the stretch back to the same point for the run home. Meanwhile Beldame went swinging on in front in her own easy gallop, with O'Neil crouching over her neck with a strong restraining pull, the filly holding her place in front with such ease that before the first half mile was run watchers commented on the seeming lack of pace. Beldame was galloping quite fast enough to keep her pursuers busy, however, and as the far turn was reached, at the end of the first mile, both Africander and Broomstick were being urged forward in the vain effort to close on the filly.

On the turn Beldame moved away a trifle further, but O'Neil kept the same pull on her and had her galloping easily in the lead at the end of the mile and a quarter, where Africander and Broomstick were being hard ridden, Africander at that point drawing away from Broomstick and for just a moment causing his admirers to hope that he still might overtake Beldame, Africander's effort at the head of the stretch finished the beating that the filly had given him already, for he began to tire as the last quarter was begun, and Broomstick, closing again, drew up to him, and began anew the fight for second place. McChesney, coming on from the rear, joined in the struggle at the same time, though as far as the race was concerned, Beldame, striding along at her ease in front, already had it safe, and without ever the least call on her powers cantered in first by four lengths. Broomstick came away from Africander in the last hundred yards, and ridden out, got second place by a length, while McChesney in the last jump caught the tired Africander and beat him a head for third money.

Beldame's victory is the first for a three-year-old filley in the Second Special. The time of the race was 2:35 2-5, the fractions being, first quarter, 0:26; half mile, 0:50; three-quarters, 1:15 3-5; mile, 1:41, and mile and a quarter, 2:07 3-5.

Another stake feature of the day was the race for the King's Highway Steeplechase, a handicap over the full course of two miles and a half. For this seven horses ran, and the clever jumper Foxhunter, with the top weight of 164 pounds, started favorite at even money and won easily after making most of the running, Malden, ridden by the luckless Mara, fell at the Liverpool and Mara was badly shaken up.

Major Pelham led throughout, and won the first race in handy style. In the third race Czaraphine, after getting away last of a field of eleven, went through the others like a flash, and won easily at the end.

Bulwark easily took the fifth event, after Gallowses led to the last turn, and Greenade, well backed by his stable, made most of the running in the last race, and was first ridden out before Ormonde's Right. Three favorites were successful, being Beldame, Foxhunter, and Bulwark. Summaries:

WORLD'S RECORDS GO AT AUTOMOBILE MEET

New Class Figures from Two to Ten Miles Made.

ON THE EMPIRE CITY TRACK

W. Gould Brokaw's 30-Horse Power Racer Wins International Cup Event in Fastest Time.

W. Gould Brokaw's thirty-horse-power Renault racer, driven by Joseph Tracy, carried off the principal honors at the automobile race meet at the Empire City track, at Yonkers, yesterday afternoon, winning the international cup race at ten miles from a field representative of America, France, Germany, and Italy, and making new world's track records for the middleweight class from two to ten miles. The supplanted records were made on the same track, and by the same machine, though driven then by M. G. Bernin, on July 16.

The race was run in four trials at five miles and a final at ten miles. The first trial was for Italian cars and had two starters, both of the F. I. A. T. make and of twenty-four horse power. One was entered and driven by E. K. Wallace and the other was entered by Hollander & Tangeman and driven by Paul Satori, who drove Alfred G. Vanderbilt's sixty horse power Mercedes in record-breaking time at the July meet on the same track. Wallace led at the first mile, but in the second mile Satori went to the front and easily won the right to enter the final.

In the second trial, for German cars, E. R. Thomas's sixty horse power Mercedes machine was the only one which appeared at the starting line, and it qualified for the final without a race. The Ford car qualified in a similar manner in the third trial, for American cars. In the fourth trial, for French cars, there were two starters—the Brokaw Renault, with Tracy driving, and M. C. Herrman's seventy horse power Panhard, driven by Felix Froger. Tracy disposed of his big opponent within the first half mile, and then started to lower records. He succeeded at two and at three miles, going these distances in 2:03 3-5 and 3:06 2-5, respectively. The former records were 2:04 1-5 and 3:06 3-5 by the same machine. Tracy's time for four miles was 4:08 4-5, the record being 4:07, and for five miles 5:08 3-5, the record being 5:08 1-5.

In the final heat Tracy made a runaway of the event and established new world's figures for every mile after the first. The Thomas Mercedes, though of double the power, was unable to hold the pace, despite Hawley's best efforts, and was beaten by nearly a quarter of a mile. Tracy's time by miles was as follows: One mile, 1:03 2-5; two miles, 2:02 3-5; three miles, 3:02; four miles, 4:01 3-5; five miles, 5:01; six miles, 6:01 2-5; seven miles, 7:01 3-5; eight miles, 8:02 1-5; nine miles, 9:02 1-5; ten miles, 10:01 2-5. The previous record for ten miles was 10:13 2-5, and this was also beaten by the Thomas Mercedes, which made the distance in 10:07 4-5.

H. L. Bowden's 100-horse power Mercedes and Carl Fisher's 32-horse power Premier racer, which were expected to make some remarkable performances, did not appear at all, and it was announced that both had been disabled while practicing on the track on Friday afternoon. The attendance was the largest of the season, and over 300 automobiles were parked upon the lawn or under the grand stand. The summary follows:

KIELY AT LOVE FEAST.

Police Commissioner McAdoo Presents Cup to Champion Athlete.

Thomas F. Kiely, the Irish athlete, who won the world's all-around athletic championship under the colors of the Greater New York Irish Athletic Association, was the guest of honor at a love feast in Sulzer's Harlem River Park last night. Kiely sails for home next Wednesday, but expects to return. On behalf of the many friends here, Police Commissioner McAdoo presented a loving cup, fourteen inches high, of silver and gold lined, to him. It bears the following inscription:

"Presented by his countrymen here in America to Thomas F. Kiely of Ireland, all-around champion of the world; won at the Olympic games, St. Louis, U. S. A."

Commissioner McAdoo told of Kiely's prowess and declared that he was a credit to the race he represented. "Mr. Kiely is going back to Ireland," said the Commissioner; "he goes, I am sure, to promote the best interests of his own people. I am glad that he is going. If he remained here he might become a participant in all kinds of trouble. He might even have the woes of a Police Commissioner. But he is going to keep the credit of the Irish people in Ireland, where it naturally belongs. We wish him a happy return."

CHAMPION WARD BEATEN.

Kings County Wins Championship of Local Tennis League.

The Kings County Tennis Club team won the championship of the Metropolitan Interclub League by virtue of the defeat of the Crescent Athletic Club team in the matches played yesterday on the courts of the New York Lawn Tennis Club. Incidentally, the champion of the year, Holcombe Ward, representing the Crescents, was defeated by Robert Le Roy of the New Yorks. This series was played as a result of a committee meeting which recently decided that certain matches defaulted earlier in the season should be played out. The New York team consisted of Robert Le Roy and Harry F. Allen, and Ward and R. F. Carlton represented the Crescent Athletic Club.

In his match against Ward, Le Roy got a good lead and surprised the champion by his swift drives, passing Ward at the net again and again. Le Roy exhibited some nervousness at first, but he never allowed it to interfere with his drives, which invariably went low and hard. He slumped somewhat during the middle of the set, but won, after deuce had been called, 7—5.

Ward seemed to underrate his opponent and he began the second set wearing a confident smile, but Le Roy seemed undaunted and started off with a rush, and it looked for a while as if Ward would lose two straight. With the score 3—5 against him and the game 30—40, he pulled out and won four straight and the set at 7—5.

It looked like Ward's match then, for he had not played the hard game that Le Roy had, but the latter kept doggedly at it. Ward seemed to be unable to do anything with the passes along the side lines. The playing became extremely close, and Ward began to put on more steam. With the set 4—5 against him he took the next game and brought the score to deuce, but Le Roy threw himself into the next two games for all he was worth and won them handily.

Allen defeated Carlton in the other singles match, and the doubles match was left unfinished. Summary:

Interclub Singles.—Robert Le Roy defeated Holcombe Ward, 7—5, 5—7, 7—5; Harry F. Allen defeated R. H. Carlton, 6—1, 6—3.
Doubles.—Ward and Carlton vs. Le Roy and Allen, 6—4, 5—7, 4 all, (unfinished.)

There are six of the most expert players of the club in this class, including F. C. Anderson, F. W. Heitkamp, H. Mollenhauer, J. T. McMahon, S. A. Westfall, and A. L. Williston. Three round robin matches were played yesterday besides matches in the second and third classes. Summary:

Round Robin Men's Singles.—J. T. McMahon defeated F. C. Anderson, 2—6, 9—7, 6—3, 6—4; S. A. Westfall defeated F. W. Heitkamp, 6—3, 6—1, 10—8; H. Mollenhauer defeated A. L. Williston, 6—2, 6—1, 6—1.

LOCAL CRICKETERS IN MATCHES

Essex County Club Secures Second Place in Association Championship.

Second place in the championship series of the New York Cricket Association was decided yesterday afternoon, when the eleven of the Essex County Cricket Club defeated the second team of the Manhattan Cricket Club in the final game at Branch Brook Park, in Newark, on totals of 78 to 29, and finished as runner-up to the West Indians, who secured the pennant a week ago.

The Newark Club had as opponents the O. N. T. Club and was defeated by 98 runs and 3 wickets. The totals were: Newark, 34; O. N. T., 132 for 7 wickets.

At Prospect Park the champion team of the Livingston Field Club encountered the first eleven of the Kings County Cricket Club, and although the Staten Islanders outbatted the Brooklynites easily, the game resulted in a draw, owing to lack of time in which to play to a conclusion. The totals were: Livingston Field Club, 173 declared for 6 wickets; Kings County, 79 for 9 wickets.

For the fifth time this season the Brooklyn Juniors and the eleven of the All Angels' Cricket Club of New York came together at the Parade Ground yesterday, the result being a victory for the Brooklyn boys, who thereby tallied their second victory of the series. The totals were 59 to 45.

A visiting team of the Union County Cricket Club played a return match with the Livingston Field Club at Staten Island on Friday. The result of the game was a draw, Livingston making 156, while the Union County team's score was 88 for 6 wickets. The feature of the game was the good batting of A. G. Laurie, who scored 78 for Livingston, when he was caught out by R. Brooking. The best stand for Union County was made by R. Brooking with 44, not out.

In the association championship contest played at William's Bridge between the second eleven of the Columbia Oval Cricket Club and the Union County Cricket Club of Elizabeth, N. J., yesterday, the latter secured the winner on totals of 42 to 58 for seven wickets.

A veterans' match between teams captained by W. Fenwick, former secretary of the League, and Dr. E. V. Brendon at William's Bridge resulted, after a close finish, in favor of the latter's side by five runs. The totals were 58 and 53.

With the Trotters and Pacers.

The final matinee of the New York Driving Club will be held at the Empire City track next Saturday afternoon, when the season's championship cups will be presented. The event of the day will be the championship trotting class, as Princess Pique, owned by Thomas B. Leahy; Anna Little, owned by Col. John F. Cockerill, and Wilton Boy, owned by A. E. Perran, have tied for first honors.

Florence Wilton, the speedy green pacing mare that caused a sensation on the Speedway last week by defeating all starters, has been purchased by W. C. Greene, and will probably be entered in the Fall championship class. Fluence Wilton is by Wilton, (2:19¼,) and has paced halves at the Empire City track recently better than one minute. Her former owner was Gustave French of Independence, Ia., and the price paid is reported to be $6,500.

John C. Walker, owner of the show ring trotter Dainty, has bought a fast pole team that he intends to show in the Fall championships if team classes are arranged.

The Road Drivers' Association of New York City will hold a meeting this week to make arrangements for the Fall championships on the Speedway. George Coleman, of the Brush Committee, has announced that the first matinee will be held on the lower stretch of the Speedway Oct. 8. There is talk of several cups being offered for special classes.

The Fall meeting at the Parkway track, Brooklyn, will open Tuesday afternoon, and continue until Friday. There will be four races each day for liberal purses.

C. K. G. Billings and E. E. Smathers have announced their intention of entering the trotting and pacing stars of their stables in the Fall matinees of the Road Drivers' Association on the Speedway. An effort will also be made to arrange a meeting between Don Derby, 2:04¾, owned by James Murphy of Chicago, the 1903 pacing champion of the Speedway, and the famous pacing gelding John M. of Mr. Smathers's stable.

F. G. Schmidt, the well-known and popular road driver, who was injured during the Grand Circuit meeting at the Empire City track, is rapidly recovering and will soon be able to drive his favorites again. His entire stable is now at Parkway in charge of "Bob" Davis, trainer, who reports that the fast but erratic trotter Prince Greenlander is going as steady as a clock. The animal has been in the hands of several of the best trainers in the country, who could not get him to act well enough to win a race, although they admitted that he had plenty of speed.

YACHT CLUBS HOLD THEIR FALL REGATTAS

Weather Conditions Too Trying for Anything Below the Raceabouts.

RIVERSIDE AND ATLANTIC CLUBS

Of Thirteen Starters in Riverside Event Four Failed to Finish—Seawanhaka Members Race.

The Fall regatta of the Riverside Yacht Club, the last general club event of the season, was sailed yesterday on Long Island Sound under weather conditions that tried both yachts and yachtsmen. A "smoky sou'wester" sweeping across the Sound made pennants snap and kicked up a turbulent sea. The start was postponed an hour and a half for the weather to moderate and give the small boats a chance. But the weather would not moderate and nothing smaller than raceabouts ventured out. For the first time this season the raceabouts raced with reefed mainsails. Altogether there were thirteen starters, and the number asserted its proverbial unlucky influence on at least some of the boats, for four out of the thirteen failed to finish.

The yachts were sent off to windward, for a beat from the gas buoy east of Little Captain's Island to Matinnicock Point; thence the larger boats had a broad reach with booms on the port hand to Lloyd's Neck, and a close reach back across the Sound. The smaller boats turned the Centre Island Buoy and had an easy reach back to the starting line. The Anoatok led the thirty-six-footers at the start, but was soon passed by both the Mimosa and Spasm. The Mimosa, though in the lead when last seen, was one of the boats that failed to finish. Following is the summary:

The winners were Spasm, Tartan, and Vergeth. The Regatta Committee, Charles P. Tower, George T. Higgins, and Charles F. Kirby, had the use of Rear Commodore A. R. Starr's auxiliary ydwl Aiga.

In a fresh breeze from the southwest that made an ugly sea in the lower bay, sixteen yachts sailed a fast race yesterday in the final regatta of the Atlantic Yacht Club. Five classes filled, and with the crack yachts of the season, the contests were of the keenest kind, and those who went down the bay to the turning points—Southwest Spit buoy for the big classes, and Old Orchard Shoal for the small ones—saw good sport.

Single reefs were tied in by most of the yachts, for it was piping merrily, and the bay was covered with whitecaps when the starting signal for Classes M and N was given at 11:15 A. M. The line was established between two mark boats anchored in Gravesend Bay. J. D. O'Donohue's Nep Redwing, S. E. Vernon's Vivian II., E. S. Luckenbach's Bobtail, and Hendon Clubb's Bagheera got away on this signal. They were on the starboard tack for it was windward work for them all the way down the main ship channel to the Spit buoy, and a spinnaker run home.

Those that got away at 11:20 were the Lizana, Ogeemah, Bonito, Smoke, Ogeemah, Trouble, Spots, Karma, Careless, and Judge. The Beta and Gamma started at 11:25. The Bonito, Smoke, Miss Judy, and Naiad stood too far to the southward, while the others, by going to the Staten Island shore, cheated the tide and got smooth water. The Redwing won from the Vivian II. by 1:39, the Bobtail from the Bagheer by 2:01, the Lizana from the Bonito by 12:22, the Ogeemah from the Spots by 8:33, and the Beta from Gamma by 2:23.

The Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club held a race yesterday for twenty-one-footers owned by members. It was sailed over the inside course at Oyster Bay in a piping southwest breeze that made the water fly. Only three yachts started. They went off on a broad reach, with booms to port, afterward gybed to starboard and beat back. The winner was the Merry Wing. Following is the summary:

Egan picked up on the next nine holes and cut down Lyon's lead to one hole, at the end of the eighteen holes being the first half of the 36-hole match. THREE POOLROOM RAIDS MADE WITH HAMMERS

McAdoo Ordered Them—Two Were Over Captains' Heads.

FOURTEEN PRISONERS MADE

Attack Believed to Mean Renewed Warfare Against the Poolrooms — Several Telephones Seized by Police.

Fourteen prisoners were taken and considerable money and paraphernalia gathered yesterday in three raids of the sledge-hammer variety, which were ordered by Commissioner McAdoo, and are believed to signalize a renewal on his part of the warfare against the poolroom fraternity.

Two of the raids were in the precinct of Capt. McNally of the Church Street Station and one in Capt. Shire's East Thirty-fifth Street Precinct. The raids in Capt. McNally's bailiwick were engineered by men from Police Headquarters. They were on two alleged poolrooms in Vesey Street, one at 62 and the other at 100.

The place at 62 Vesey Street is known as the Ainotai Club, and is on the second floor of a three-story building. Before an entrance could be gained three steel-covered doors were broken through and practically wrecked. More than two hundred men were in the place. A wild scramble for windows and other exits followed, but every avenue of escape was closely guarded by the detectives and all of those in the room were caught. Detective Sergeant Burke had warrants issued by Magistrate Mayo, in the Tombs Court, for the arrest of five persons on a charge of being connected with the establishment. All of those found in the place were lined up, and after the men wanted by the police had been picked out, the others were allowed to go.

The prisoners were Robert Evans, the alleged proprietor; George Jackson, Harry Smith, James Martin, and Frank Williams of 101 Vesey Street. The police carted away two telephone instruments, blackboards, a quantity of racing cards, and a large box of stationery.

The place at 100 Vesey Street was on the second floor of the Washington Market Hotel, a Raines law affair. Here the police battered down a door or two in order to gain admission. Only five men of the crowd found there were held. The place is known as the International Navigation Athletic Club, but the police did not find any gymnasium in connection with the place. Philip Schneider, one of the prisoners, is said to be the proprietor. Detective Sergt. Eggers of Chief Inspector Cortright's staff was in charge of the raiding party.

Capt. Shire and seven detectives made a raid late yesterday afternoon on an alleged poolroom in Thirty-second Street, near Third Avenue. The place raided is directly above a blacksmith shop belonging to ex-President Woods of the Board of Aldermen.

Capt. Shire said he first heard of the place about six weeks ago, and had Policeman Rooney of the Elizabeth Street Station detailed in his precinct for the purpose of securing the evidence against it. Rooney was not able to gain admittance until about a week ago. Since then he says he has "played the races" in the place every day, and yesterday he secured warrants for five men charged with being connected with its management from Magistrate Flammer in the Yorkville Court.

Three of the detectives attacked the place from the rear by making their way into the yard and placing a ladder against one of the rear windows. Capt. Shire and the rest of his men in the meantime prepared to force the main entrance. At a signal from the Captain the men in front, wielding sledgehammers, battered down an oak door and were getting to work on a steel-lined door on the inside while other detectives jumped through the windows and held some 200 men inside at bay while the party attacking from the front could be admitted.

In the front of the building the police found a big reception room, with chairs and tables. This room was crowded. At the rear was a small room, which, according to the police, had been used as a cashier's office. Holes had been cut in the wall to pass the money through. In the small room the raiders found two telephones and a few hundred dollars. So hurried had been the departure of the clerical staff that the entry sheets had been left on the table.

The police say that the proprietor got away. Four prisoners were made. One of these, who gave his name as John Henry and said he was a clerk, living at 331 Graham Avenue, Brooklyn, was charged with maintaining the establishment. The police say that Henry is not his right name, and declare that he is a wealthy hotel keeper of Long Island City.

SUICIDE INSANE FROM BOIL.

Otsego County Lad's Mind Was Unbalanced by Carbuncle.

UTICA, N. Y., Sept. 24.—Henry Steinberg, nineteen years old, of East Springfield, Otsego County, was found dead to-day in a grove at Richfield Springs with a bottle of carbolic acid and chloroform beside him.

He had lately gone to the Springs to attend school, and his mind had been unbalanced by a carbuncle.

VALUABLE PAINTINGS BURNED.

Catholic School at Boston Destroyed—Firemen Slightly Hurt.

BOSTON, Sept. 24.—Eight persons were slightly injured and a property loss of about $125,000 was caused at a fire this afternoon which practically destroyed the large four-story and a half brick building used for St. Augustine's parochial school in E Street, South Boston. No pupils were in the schoolhouse at the time.

Those injured were firemen and spectators who were more or less cut and bruised either by falls from ladders or by being struck by falling debris. Many valuable paintings were ruined. Mgr. O'Callaghan said that many of the paintings and much of the statuary in the school had been imported, and the loss could not be measured in money.

THE LIE PASSED IN COURT.

President Randolph of Consolidated Exchange Contradicts Plainfield Lawyer.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Sept. 24.—The climax of a bitter feud brought about by the erection of an alleged spite house in the exclusive section of Plainfield came to a head in court here this morning, when ex-Councilman Walter L. Hetfield, Sr., counsel for the owner of the structure, who was defending the case, bitterly attacked ex-Mayor L. V. F. Randolph, President of the New York Consolidated Petroleum and Stock Exchange.

After the defendant had been fined by Judge Runyon for maintaining a nuisance at his place, Mr. Randolph, the complainant, asked permission to deny Mr. Hetfield's accusation that he had sent garbled and distorted stories to the local papers pending the decision.

"His statement is a direct and unqualified falsehood," shouted Mr. Randolph.

In an instant Mr. Hetfield jumped to his feet in a rage, and cried:

"There is no bigger liar on this earth than you, Randolph."

As the two men quickly advanced toward each other, Chief of Police Kiely jumped between them, ordering them in the name of the law to stop. Order was finally restored.

Mr. Hetfield immediately gave notice of an appeal. Mr. Randolph, in addition to being the head of the Consolidated Exchange, is President of the Atlantic Trust Company, an executor of the Samuel J. Tilden estate, and one of the largest owners of real estate in this city.

POLICE TRAP SPRUNG.

Thoughtful Capt. McCarthy Let Alleged Thief Return to Work.

Acting Capt. James McCarthy of the Adams Street Police Station, Brooklyn, is responsible for the catching of an alleged lead pipe thief in a house on Brooklyn Heights yesterday. On Friday a thief broke into the vacant house at 131 Joralemon Street and stole a lot of lead pipe and gas fittings. The thief sawed his way through two doors to get into the house. Upon leaving he carefully stuck the sawed out portions of the doors in place again so that one would hardly notice that the doors had been tampered with. Several hours later, however, the owner of the building discovered the robbery and had the two doors tightly boarded up. Sergt. McCarthy had the owner remove the boards.

"That fellow is coming back for more lead pipe," he said. "He certainly didn't want it known that he had entered the house."

Patrolman Gentleman stayed in the house all night. Yesterday morning as he was peeping through the window blinds he saw a shabbily dressed man sneak into the dooryard. The policeman waited and heard the man getting in through the openings which had been made in the doors. Stealing softly down stairs Gentleman surprised the intruder sawing away at the lead piping in the basement.

"Good morning," said the policeman cheerily.

"Holy smoke! Where'd you drop from?" exclaimed the startled and amazed stranger.

"Why, I've been waiting for you all night," exclaimed Gentleman.

In the Adams Street Court the prisoner described himself as Walter Ryan, fifty years old, no home or occupation. He was held for examination on Tuesday.

MONEY FOR RIFLEMEN.

Congress Probably Will Make Appropriations for Ranges and Equipment.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—The probability that Congress will make provision at its next annual session for a large annual appropriation to be devoted to the purchase of ranges, the equipment of ranges, indoor and outdoor, and ammunition for organizations of riflemen, in accordance with the plan drafted by the National Board for the promotion of rifle practice, is responsible for renewed interest in rifle and revolver shooting.

The National Board has announced its desire to secure an enrollment in the National Marksmen's Reserve of from 500,000 to 1,000,000 men, and if Congress is in earnest adequate provisions must be made for the guns, ammunition, targets, and, above all, ranges.

Pending appropriations for this purpose, those desiring to learn to shoot can find considerable amusement and some valuable experience by undertaking to estimate distances. This proposition appears to be simple, but it is more difficult than it seems. Some time ago a party of thirty-five or forty men, the most expert rifle shots in the country, were gathered at Sea Girt, N. J., for the matches on the result of which depended the selection of a team to go to England to shoot for the Palma Trophy. Some one asked how far it was to a certain fence, and immediately every man estimated the distance.

The distance was paced, and the result was ludicrous. Every one had over-estimated it, the closest guess being fifty yards out of the way, while the majority exceeded it by 200 yards. Yet twelve of those same men went to England and won the biggest international rifle match ever held.

BOY KILLS 55-YEAR-OLD MAN.

Driver, Harassed by Youngsters, Started to Use His Lash.

WALPOLE, Mass., Sept. 24.—Schoolboy fun caused the death of J. Orle Harding, fifty-five years old, of Foxborough, and Ralph Hudson, fifteen years old, of East Walpole is under arrest in connection with the affair. Hudson, according to the police, with several other boys, on the way home from school yesterday threw apples at Harding as he passed on his laundry wagon.

Harding jumped out and, it is said, began lashing the Hudson boy with his whip. Then Hudson, it is alleged, knocked Harding down with his fist. The latter's head struck the pavement, fracturing his skull. He died a few hours later.

THESPIAN BUGS STALL TRAIN.

Two Nights' Frosts Had Driven Them, Stranded, to the Ties.

Special to The New York Times.

MATTAWAN, N. J., Sept. 24.—A Jersey Central freight train, on the New York and Long Branch Road, was held up here last evening by a monster company of stranded potato bugs. The speckle-backed insects, driven to abandon the neighborhood hereabout by the frosts they had received the last two nights, had swarmed up over the railroad tracks, and, actorlike, started on their long tramp to a more congenial clime. For a considerable distance they thronged the roadbed in such multitudes that one could not put down his foot without crushing a tragedian or two and at least a dozen soubrettes.

Last evening the heavy Jersey Central freight train ran into the migrant Thespians on the rising grade just below town. Then ensued a slaughter of talent that made the rails fairly run with insect gore, and the train slid back again toward the foot of the hill. It was backed, and dashed forward again with all speed on. The result was the same, and several repetitions of the attempt were equally futile.

Eventually, when it began to appear that the train would be taken by storm, men with shovels and brooms scraped and swept the potato bugs from the rails and spread about enough sand for the engine to get a grip with which it could draw its load. When last heard of, the survivors of the troupe were headed in a southwesterly direction, but had abandoned the ties for the public highway.

TO INDICT GEORGIA LYNCHERS.

Judge Who Tried Negroes Will So Instruct Grand Jury.

ATLANTA, Ga., Sept. 24.—Judge Alexander F. Daly of the Middle Circuit, under whom the negroes Paul Reed and Will Cato were tried and then taken from the courtroom and burned by the mob after they had been convicted and sentenced at Statesborough, was in consultation with Gov. Terrell here to-day.

Judge Daly announces that when his court convenes the first Monday in October he will charge the jury that it is its duty to indict the men who took part in the burning of the two negroes.

Cow Derails Train; Road's Head Aboard

MADISON, Me., Sept. 24.—A cow on the track derailed an in-bound passenger train on the Somerset Railroad at a point one mile north of this station this afternoon. No one was seriously injured. Among the fifty passengers was Gov. John F. Hill, President of the road.

Belong to "Boston Shorty" Gang.

PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 24.—The prisoner recently indicted for a Post Office robbery at Pittsfield, under the name of "Philip Wagner," was to-day identified as James Egan, an alleged member of the notorious "Boston Shorty" gang of bank and Post Office safe blowers which has terrorized sections of the State for three years.

Negro Lynched in South Carolina.

GREENWOOD, S. C., Sept. 24.—A crowd of Laurens citizens brought a young negro named James Stuart into Greenwood County last night and lynched him. Stuart had attempted assault on the fourteen-year-old daughter of "Doc" Hughes, a farmer. The Greenwood Coroner is holding an inquest.

Gun Fired Accidentally; Boy Killed.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Sept. 24.—Harold Metcalf, son of a farmer, was putting his shotgun into the back of a buggy preparing to return home to-day, when one barrel was discharged, the load taking effect in his abdomen. He died instantly.

WORK TO BEGIN SOON ON AN UP-TOWN CONEY

Will Cost Over $1,000,000—A Scenic Wonder Promised.

HIGH-CLASS SHOW PROJECTED

Promoters to Bring Foreign Animal and Vaudeville Acts to Manhattan Field —Electrical Wonders Planned.

Some details of a big amusement resort which it is declared will be found in full operation on the site of the Manhattan Field, near the Polo Grounds, next Summer were made public yesterday. The resort, it is said, will cost more than $1,000,000, and will surpass in scenic effect anything else of the sort on this side of the Atlantic. It will be opened by next June, the promoters say.

The undertaking will be carried out by Thompson & Dundy, the proprietors of Luna Park, associated with John T. Brush, President of the New York National League Baseball Club. The resort will be run in conjunction with the Coney Island show, although it is intended that the new exhibition shall be of a somewhat more dignified nature than the other.

The buildings to be erected on the Manhattan Field will be permanent in character, and, except for courts and avenues here and there, will practically cover the entire area of nine acres. A large court, with radiating paths, according to present plans, will occupy the centre of the plot. The aspect of the whole place is to be European, and, carrying out this idea, there will be large German restaurants and terraces, French gardens, English plazas, and so on.

Cascades and other water effects will appear here and there, which will be illuminated at night by electric lights. It is proposed to have the electrical display outstrip that at Luna Park and to be visible for miles around. Describing the project yesterday, Mr. Thompson said:

"We intend to begin work on the new park in sixty days, and to have it finished by the middle of next May or the first of June. Between 1,500 and 2,000 men will be put to work on the job, and there will be no suspension of activities until it is completed.

"One of the more noteworthy attractions to be presented will be a detachment from the circus of Edward Wulff, at Brussels, comprising 100 performing and plunging horses, the first ever seen in America. This feature will be combined with other animal performances and vaudeville acts, the former to be in charge of Seth Brook, the so-called 'Animal King' of Europe. We shall also have chutes and scenic railways for those who like such things. The place will differ considerably from Luna Park in that there will be fewer sideshows and more serious entertainments.

"The hippodrome which we are to have at Forty-third Street and Sixth Avenue will be completed by Jan. 1, and we shall arrange to transfer much of this show, which will be open only in Winter, to the up-town park for the Summer months. In the park 1,500 persons will be employed constantly during the show season, and the general admission fee to the grounds will be 25 cents.

"We believe there is a demand in the northern part of the city for a clean and wholesome pleasure resort more on the educational order than any now in existence, and it is to meet this demand that we have decided upon the new venture. Coney Island is too far away to attract thousands of Harlemites, and residents of the Bronx who, we believe, would be glad to patronize a first-class pleasure park nearer home."

OMAHA STRIKE LEADERS FINED.

Violated Injunction Forbidding Interference with Non-Union Men.

OMAHA, Neb., Sept. 24.—George Stevens, Secretary of the local council of the Amalgamated Meat Butchers' Union, was to-day fined $250 and costs by United States Judge Munger for violating an injunction of the Federal court restraining the packing house strikers from interfering with non-union men who sought employment during the recent packing house strike.

Thirty-four of Mr. Stevens's associates were fined $20 each and a proportion of the costs. Execution of the sentence is suspended until Oct. 8, to give the strikers opportunity to appeal if they desire.

DEAD IN COLD STORAGE PLANT.

Proprietor's Body Found in Elevator Shaft—Mystery at Medina.

MEDINA, N. Y., Sept. 24.—Frank C. Austin of the produce firm of Austin & Dye was found unconscious last night at his cold storage building and died this morning. Mr. Austin had taken the place of William James, the night watchman, that James, in company with Floyd Austin, might go to the theatre.

When the two men returned at 11 o'clock all of the electric lights in the building were extinguished. The front door, which had not been forced, however, was standing open. The refrigerating machinery was running, but Mr. Austin was not in sight. After a long search his body was found at the bottom of the freight elevator shaft. His vest had been ripped open, but his pocketbook containing $50 had not been disturbed, and nothing was missing from the building. A deep gash over the eye, a fracture of the skull at the back, with some bruises, constituted his injuries. All of the door guards on the different landings were closed. Mr. Austin did not regain consciousness before his death. Coroner Munson will hold an inquest.

There are many theories of foul play, but friends of Mr. Austin say he had no enemies so far as known, and believe his death was due to an accident.

Miss Julia Beach Leupp Dead.

Miss Julia Beach Leupp died at New Brunswick, N. J., on Friday evening after a long illness. She was sixty-seven years old and a daughter of William H. Leupp, for many years a well-known member of the New Jersey bar. She was noted for her extensive charities and was Registrar of the Daughters of the American Revolution of New Jersey. She is survived by three brothers, William H. Leupp, President of the Trust Company of America; Beach Leupp, John H. Leupp, and one sister, Miss Cornelia Leupp.

Dry Dock Hotel Woman Freed.

Because of the failure of the police to trace the whereabouts of Bernard Rice, the Buffalo traveling salesman who said he was robbed in the Dry Dock Hotel last Monday night, Magistrate Flammer, in the Yorkville Court, discharged Mrs. Rose Kertz, the wife of the proprietor, yesterday. Her lawyer declared that the motive of the woman's arrest was to throw discredit on the action of Judge Gaynor, who enjoined the police from "picketing" the hotel.

Falling Cornice Breaks Boy's Skull.

Rudolf Bonde, a ten-year-old boy, was playing on Seventh Avenue within a few feet of his home, at 1,855 Seventh Avenue, yesterday, when a stone became detached from the cornice of a building at 1,864 Seventh Avenue and fell upon the boy's head. Young Bonde suffered a fracture of the skull, but his parents refused to allow him to be removed to a hospital.

Suit Here Against Coaling Company.

Howard M. Smith of New York has brought suit in the United States Circuit Court against the New York Weighing, Barge and Coaling Company, a New Jersey corporation, to recover $5,500 interest on bonds which he says should have been paid on July 12. Smith says that he owns 350 shares of the company's stock, of the par value of $35,000, and that he has instituted the proceedings in behalf of himself and all the other creditors and stockholders of the corporation in default. Judge Lacombe appointed John S. McMaster of Jersey City and John J. Townsend of New York receivers ancillary to the receiver appointed in an action brought in New Jersey.

EXPLAINS NEW FACTORY LAW.

Deputy Commissioner Says It Places Responsibility with Landlord.

First Deputy Commissioner of Labor John Williams, who has charge of the Factory Inspection Department and has been engaged for some time in perfecting arrangements for the enforcement of the new law governing factories which goes into effect on Saturday next, said yesterday that there was a great amount of misconception as to what the law really does. He said that the Department of Labor was being besieged by the operators of small factories or sweat shops, who thought that they were to be put out of business. In explanation of what the law really does, Mr. Williams said:

"The licensing of a tenement or apartment in the name of the occupant or worker is done away with, and the landlord is to be called upon to procure a license for his property, such license to cover the entire building. When he has secured this, articles of wearing apparel, cigars, cigarettes, and umbrellas, may be manufactured in all parts of the house.

"The Merchant Tailors' Society of the City of New York has issued a circular letter to the journeymen tailors, the contents of which have caused unwarranted alarm among that class of workers. We have stated distinctly that the bureau realized that it will take time to bring this work to a normal state; meanwhile it is not our purpose to interfere unnecessarily with or disturb business operations. The department intends to administer the new law from a commonsense standpoint. Owners of properties affected must make application for licenses promptly. If this is done for a reasonable period thereafter, while the application is pending, the occupants of such properties may continue to work therein without fear of molestation. But the application for the license must be made by the owner in person."

FAST STEAM LAUNCHES FOR THE HARBOR POLICE

Will Have Six New Craft, Three in Sixty Days.

THESE BOATS BADLY NEEDED

Guardians of Shipping Have Been Handicapped by Working with Frail Naphtha Launches and Rowboats.

Within the next sixty days the Police Department will have added to its equipment three steam launches for the use of the harbor police, and thereafter the work of the river pirate will become more hazardous than it has been. It is designed to have six of these launches, and the contracts for the remaining three will be awarded as soon as the three now building are completed.

For many years the harbor police have been working under great disadvantages. The department has had a few naphtha launches, but their machinery is continually getting out of order, and the boats cannot be depended upon in case of emergency. The rest of the equipment consists of rowboats, and in addition to the hard work regularly demanded of the men, they have suffered severely in Winter. Then, too, river pirates are as good oarsmen as the police, and when they are about to be overhauled after a chase by the department craft, the thieves have a habit of dumping their booty overboard, making it impossible to fasten crimes on them.

When it is understood that Capt. Dean of the harbor police has 385 miles of water front to patrol, the disadvantages under which he has worked are apparent. Commissioner McAdoo therefore cast about for a plan to help this arm of the police service, and Capt. Dean was instructed to have drawn up designs for launches that would meet every requirement.

The new boats are shaped much like a tug, except that they have no upper house, the pilot house being on the main deck. The boats are heated throughout by steam, and can accommodate several men should it be necessary to sleep on board. They will carry a pilot, quartermaster, and six or seven of a crew, but in cases of necessity they can carry from twenty-five to thirty men without undue crowding.

"With six of these launches going on the river," said Capt. Dean yesterday, "we believe we will be able to prevent every kind of piracy. With launches running twelve miles an hour we can overhaul any river pirate and get him with the goods on him. We shall be enabled to stem tides and currents that are impossible for rowboats, and in cases of accident to river craft the services of these new boats will be invaluable. I believe that the Slocum disaster had much to do with shaping the Commissioner's decision to have the new launches built. It will readily be seen what a few of these boats could have done had they been within striking distance of the steamer when it caught fire.

"No one has any idea what our men have suffered while patrolling the rivers on Winter nights. Not only can this suffering be averted in the future, as soon as our equipment is complete, but our men will be able to do immeasurably more efficient service. It is due to our continually increasing shipping that we should be furnished with adequate means to protect it."

The contracts for the new craft have been awarded to the Electric Launch Company of Bayonne City, N. J., and the cost of each boat is $6,700. The dimensions are 50 feet over all, 45 feet 5 inches on the water line and 10 feet 6 inches beam. The boats will draw 42 inches of water and are guaranteed to attain a speed of 12 knots an hour. They are equipped with Wells engines and Roberts boilers, and the material used in their construction has been specially selected George Gardiner of the Crescent Ship Yards in Elizabethport will superintend the work of construction.

WRECKED CAB, BUT PAID.

Down-Town Voyagers Amply Satisfied the Tenderloin Nighthawk Pilot.

Samuel Smith, who runs a nighthawk cab—home port, the Tenderloin—was in the Tombs Court yesterday as complainant against three men, who described themselves as Edward Hart, Harry Blakely, and John Smith of Jersey City, and employed in an architect's office here. They were his "fares" on a trip down town early yesterday morning, and he says that while they were going down West Broadway one of the trio seized the reins and ran the horse into a plate-glass window. The cab was badly damaged.

In court the three offered to pay for all damages, and were discharged. What they paid the cabman didn't say, but he grinned happily as he said:

"Those guys can ride with me any old night for the same figures."

Steamship Fireman Rescued.

John Kavanagh, a fireman on the tramp steamer Rippanban Granzo, fell or jumped from the steamer yesterday morning. Fourth Officer Campbell plunged in and held him up until a rowboat from the ferryboat Westfield picked up the couple. Kavanagh, who had been suffering from pneumonia, was sent to St. Vincent's Hospital. The ship sailed without him.

BUILDING TRADE UNIONS FAST LEAVING ALLIANCE

Break-Up of That Body May Come This Week.

CABINET MAKERS ORGANIZE.

Secede from Old Carpenters' Brotherhood, Which Is Becoming Depleted —Tile Layers Want Peace.

There were indications yesterday that there would be few organizations left in the Building Trades Alliance before the present week is over, if all of its affiliated trades which make a settlement with the Employers' Association either resign from the alliance or are suspended. A complete surrender of all the unions, either by a settlement or by joining the new unions is looked for before many days, whether they remain in the alliance or not.

The Greater New York Cabinet Makers' Union was formed yesterday afternoon under the arbitration agreement. One hundred and three members were given union cards, and their wages will be the regular union rate of $3.78 a day for eight hours. The old union is a local of the Brotherhood of Carpenters, which is locked out, and its members must join the new union as a condition of obtaining work.

The lately organized Greater New York Carpenters' Union made a trade agreement last evening with the Master Carpenters' Association, and all house and shop carpenters in the brotherhood must join it as a means of obtaining work. The wages are to be $4.50 a day for house carpenters and $3.78 for shop carpenters for an eight-hour workday.

The Employing Tile, Grate, and Mantel Association reported yesterday that the Tile Layers' Union as well as the Plasterers' Society and Mosaic Workers Union, all Alliance unions, were now looking for peace. All three have been notified that the signing of the arbitration agreement and an agreement not to penalize the men now working must be the first conditions of settlement.

Lewis Harding, Chairman of the Press Committee of the Employers' Association, summed up the situation last evening as follows:

"Of the seventeen unions originally in the Alliance, the Elevator Constructors' Union, Tar, Felt, and Water Proof Workers' Union, Metal Lathers' Union, and Marble Cutters' Union have surrendered and are out of the body altogether. The Ornamental Plasterers' Union has revolted from the Plasterers' Society, and the Plasterers' Society itself, the Tile Layers' Union, and the Mosaic Workers' Union are likely to make a settlement within a week. Electrical Workers' Union, No. 3, and Plumbers' Union, No. 2, are rapidly breaking up, their members joining the new unions.

"The Brotherhood of Carpenters will never be recognized again by the Employers' Association. We have 1,500 carpenters at work under the arbitration agreement, 1,000 plumbers, 900 electrical workers, 200 cabinetmakers, and 600 plasterers, all trades in which the old unions have been locked out. As to the alliance, the employers pay no attention to it. It is possible that before there is a surrender of all the unions the alliance will stop suspending unions as fast as they break away, so as to keep up the organization, even though unrecognized by the employers."

FINANCIAL AND REAL ESTATE

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1904.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Upon the surface it was a week of reduced volume of business, of erratic fluctuations of prices, and of no special interest. Indeed, the flurry in Union Pacific upon the suggestions in THE TIMES that its affairs were in a condition of flux rather than fixity might almost be said to have been the week's sole incident. Certainly it was the dominating incident. Nothing could have been more explicit than the denials that there were dissensions or rivalries among the Union Pacific party. The course of the stock is confirmatory of the good faith of these asseverations that nobody needed to buy shares for control—and yet the unaccustomed activity and strength of the convertible bonds point to something unexplained.

A call—such as the convertibles practically are—upon a fluctuating stock is a good thing to have, and not very expensive when it carries interest above the market rate. Whoever holds such a call obviously has nothing to do but to wait until the stock falls and take profits upon any sales made in anticipation of such an event. Obviously the interest yield of the bonds will prevent their falling also. And if the stock rises, the convertibles must rise also, so that the conversion is a hedge against loss. This is as safe and sane a way of playing Wall Street—if those who think that everything about Wall Street is solemn and mysterious will forgive the irreverent phrase—as any other, but defects lurk amid even its sweet simplicity. The neophyte who tries the combination would do well to be sure that his selection does not fall upon such a security as Colorado Fuel and Iron convertible debentures, for instance, or he will find both his risks falling together, and he would then ponder at his leisure upon the old hands' maxim not to hedge, but to select a risk and stand by its results, one risk at a time being enough for people of average nerves and capacity to watch details.

But this is obiter dicta. The point is the Union Pacific situation, and the part the convertibles play in the politics of the railway. There are $87,259,000 of them outstanding, secured in part by $75,000,000 Southern Pacific stock. One hundred million dollars of Union Pacific common stock is authorized but unissued, to redeem the conversion privilege at the option of the holder of the convertibles before May 1, 1906. $12,741,000 has been converted already, and whoever holds the balance holds not the control of the property, but the balance of power in case of any difference of opinion between the ~~several large~~ interests. Comment upon the situation outlined in THE TIMES took the course in some prints that as the stock and convertibles are selling but a few points apart, and as the owners of control have practically unlimited resources, they would not be embarrassed in taking as many of the bonds as might be necessary to fortify their position. Doubtless, if the bonds were for sale. But the bond registry tells no such tales as stock lists corrected annually for purposes of election. There is no assurance who holds the bonds, nor what quantity is procurable. In short, the control is open to insidious attack during the life of the privilege of conversion, and the condition of the stock registry is no certain assurance that the present situation is stable. Here is adequate motive to weaken or neglect the stock in token that the owners of control feel no insecurity, and to advance whatever arguments are permissible in discouragement of securing the bonds with the conversion clause. The powerful proprietors have dealt fairly with the public. They have let it be known that they wish to keep the stock issue as small as they can. This will not decrease the public estimate of the value of the stock, and it would not be surprising if the speculation should shift from the stock to the convertibles, which now take on a double value—one party desiring them for purposes of conversion and the other to prevent conversion. It would not follow that the bonds would be the better purchase, even if the price should show some advance. They are merely potential stock after all, and if they are artificially enhanced in price, the cheaper sort of the same article would be more attractive. In all this flurry it is to be remarked that nothing has developed adverse to the intrinsic worth of the undertaking. It is merely a speculative situation affording a diverting opportunity to guess which way the cat will jump. The margin between the two descriptions makes the opportunity less inviting than it has been, but it will improve with any change in either price bringing the two issues nearer together.

Apart from this flurry, with "to be continued in our next" legible in the week's closing prices, interest flagged. Averages at the week's beginning and end were little altered, not because large falls and large advances approximately balanced, as in the week before, but because both movements were small, like the volume of business. The market was not unlike those floating fireworks which dart about violently in unexpected directions when thrown into water. Dullness in general was relieved by unlooked-for activity in a few stocks, which speedily relapsed into inactivity one after another. This was called artificial stimulation of the market, with a view to taking profits in other directions, and attention was directed to the feverish character of business resting on such a basis. Perhaps so, and yet there are considerations to the contrary. A market which sees a hundred million bushels marked off the wheat crop, two or three hundred million bushels off the corn crop, and a million bales off the cotton crop, without dropping more than a small fraction, seems to be of a sturdy constitution. Certainly it is of a different character from that flash in the pan last January, which came to nothing for no particular reason, with all the stimulating features which time developed lying before it, just as much as in the case of the rise which followed a little later. The difference between the two movements was that in the earlier case, as again in the fortnight just closed, it was sought to put up stocks by urging others to buy them. But in the rise which followed Parker's nomination prices were put up by real buying without talking about it and without feeding out the purchases at a point or two rise. It was buying upon intrinsic conditions—upon the improved political outlook, upon the crop promise, upon the easy money market, upon well-sustained although reduced railway earnings, upon sound conditions of trade, and the general balance of favorable over unfavorable factors. The question presented by last week's hesitating market is whether this outlook has become clouded.

The answer returned by the market is that the stocks bought for those reasons are not pressing for sale. That the buying for those reasons has slackened is apparent. Men of the sagacity to discern September's market in July are not given to following markets up indefinitely. When they have bought enough for their purposes or convenience, and as the price approaches the value of stocks, they retire into the background and leave the field to those who like to buy at the top, or to sell while crying how cheap stocks are. The significance of the week is that it has taken all such liquidation under unsettling conditions without losing tone. It must be granted that conditions are not so roseate as when the crop promise was better. But we have exchanged the promise for the actuality, and it may be read in the market that, after every abatement of highest hope, the actual conditions remain satisfactory to the buyers at lower prices. If it were otherwise there would be a volume pressing for realization which is not discoverable. Thus the market just now is left to the manipulators, but there is nothing to connect them with the buyers of the serious sort just described, and who would be just as serious sellers if such were their judgment of the outlook. The market tells that the largest interests are not sellers just as plainly as it revealed that they were buyers a little while ago. Instead of being conspicuously manipulated the market is being left to itself and to operators of the calibre who think they are making history and values when they run some specialty up or down a few points. In last week's market there is nothing characteristic of that cyclic movement which carried up the entire list twenty points. Instead of being a week of feverish and manipulated activity it was a week of rest and recuperation characteristic of that period between harvest and planting, when the farmers are going to St. Louis and the politicians are mending their fences. Soon the election will be past, and the market may wait for it as it did for the crop scares. Soon the new crops will be swelling the railway traffics and bank clearings and bringing foreign wealth to increase our own. There are some signs that the Winter will not be all that the most sanguine could wish, but none that it will not be good enough to meet reasonable anticipations, and altogether too good to warrant anybody in selling stocks in disappointment with their yield. Of necessitous liquidation, of selling regardless of values, there is now no sign. That is the main reason for confidence in the outlook, and sufficiently explains why neither a million-share day, nor even a week of million-share days assisted by a crop scare, which is very different from a crop calamity, marks the culmination of a movement still of excellent promise.

EDWARD A. BRADFORD.

STOCKS FROM ABROAD.

Profit in Transferring from London to New York Securities Bought Earlier in Year.

Reports of large shipments of securities from Europe to this city have been current during the past week, and to some extent have been confirmed, although it is said that in some quarters at least the movement has been misinterpreted. Although there has doubtless been some actual selling of American stocks by English and other European holders which will account for the shipment of some of our stocks to this side, it is said that the movement is a very much larger one than could be accounted for in this way, and that in reality the shipments are not due to a change of ownership, but rather to a shifting of accounts from London to New York. It is explained that a good deal of stock was bought for New York account in London during the early part of the Summer and carried there, instead of being shipped immediately to this side, and that now a good deal of this stock is being brought home, a transaction which does not indicate a throwing overboard of American stocks by foreign holders, but a transfer of securities from London to New York, where they are actually owned. The reason for the movement at this time, it is stated, is the present situation in the foreign exchange market, which permits of the transaction being made to advantage to the brokers on this side. Stocks bought earlier in the year, when sterling exchange was much higher than it is now, ruling for a considerable time, as it did, above 4.88, can now be brought to this side at a considerable profit, and for this reason the movement of American stocks to New York has assumed considerable volume.

It is clear that the remittance of the full purchase price of the stocks bought in this way at the rate of exchange ruling during the months of June and July, for example, would be considerably greater than it is now, when sterling exchange can be bought for less than 4.86, a decline which is sufficient to show a profit to the broker who bought the stocks early in the year, carried them in London, and now brings them here, of a quarter of 1 per cent. or more. The reason for this profit is that the customer for whom the stocks may have been purchased is naturally charged with the cost of the securities based on the rate of exchange at the time the purchase was made, while the incidental profit in bringing the securities to this side after the lapse of two or three months goes to the banker or broker who carries out the transaction, and not to the customer.

Thus, though a considerable amount of securities is crossing the ocean, there is little real change of ownership, the transaction being in many respects similar to the transfer of an account from one office to another. When stocks are bought abroad, unless there be special reason for some different course, they are carried in the cheapest market, which, of course, depends not only on the money rate abroad, and that here, but also upon the situation in the exchange market, which plays an important part in the transactions carried on between the New York and London markets.

THE COTTON CAMPAIGN.

Bulls and Bears Beginning to Align in Bitter Combat.

The campaign between the bulls and the bears in the cotton market is getting more active as the season advances, and opinions are being ripened regarding the probable outcome of the crop, the price which cotton should bring, the attitude of spinners, the course of the market, and the hundred and one other influences which go to make up speculation in cotton. The campaign in which it now appears Theodore H. Price will again be the leader of the bear element while Daniel J. Sully will be active on the bull side, promises to be one of unusual bitterness, to a large extent because of the reappearance of Mr. Sully as a market factor. Many members of the Exchange consider it bad taste that he should so openly enter into the field of speculation while he has not yet been discharged from bankruptcy, and their resentment is likely to lead to some interesting complications.

But aside from the personal attitude of the campaign upon which the cotton markets are about to enter there will probably be a still more pronounced difference of opinion regarding the size of the crop than there was last year. The new crop season started out with expectations of a bumper crop. Estimates of 12,000,000 and 13,000,000 bales were sent out by Southern planters, and the Government came out with a report making the condition in July as nearly perfect as possible—namely, 91.6. This report was not accepted by the cotton world. It had comparatively little influence on prices because it was believed that its realization involved an exaggerated discount of the weather in the cotton belt. Besides the department was perfectly safe in making such a high estimate as it would leave plenty of room for cutting down the condition should any unfavorable developments set in later. The report for August accordingly reduced the estimate of the condition to 84.1, a comparatively light reduction because during the month covered by that report the crop made fair headway, and did not suffer much from damage. But the cotton trade considered even that estimate too high, and confidently looks for a heavy reduction in the percentage of the condition during the month of September, for during this month there have been many unfavorable developments, such as shedding and damage from boll worms and boll weevils. The Government report has, however, a wide margin left to allow for this deterioration in the crop, a margin which it would not have had had it started its estimate at a lower level. This is a mistake it made last year, when, because of the lateness of the crop and the unfavorable weather, it began its estimates at such a low point that it had to advance the condition later in the season. On account of these variations the trade is more inclined to consider the reports from the farmers direct. These have been coming in from every county in the cotton belt, and they are almost uniformly bullish in that they declare that the deterioration of the crop in the last three weeks has been remarkable. Of course this does not necessarily mean a small crop, for the margin for deterioration is a wide one when the original estimates of 13,000,000 bales or thereabout are considered. It does mean, however, that the argument is by no means one-sided, which on the whole is a condition devoutly to be wished.

INSIDERS' MISTAKES.

Their Ability to Avoid Market Miscalculations Not as Great as Popularly Supposed.

Insiders, including in the category those who feel sufficiently familiar with the status of a stock to start a movement of their own, are generally credited in the Street with knowing all about the market for the particular stock in which they are interested and, with laying a well-formed plan for the movement which they intend carrying on in their specialty. If predictions in regard to the movement go wrong the general disposition is to state the view that the predictions were not a correct statement of the plans of the insiders, and that they were spread for the purpose of misleading the general trading public. While doubtless this view of such incidents is frequently correct, there are times when the insiders themselves come upon surprises which serve effectually to check their market plans, or else force them to change them in many important particulars. When a movement is started in some given stock, the more or less popular theory is that the insiders know precisely where the stock is held, the amounts in which it is likely to come upon the market, and various other details of the situation which make their campaign a relatively easy matter. Unfortunately for insiders in general, this view is in many particulars incorrect.

Sometimes a large block of stock which has for a long time been awaiting a market, but the existence of which has been forgotten, is suddenly thrown on the market before the plans are well developed and checks at the very outset a movement for which much had been promised and in good faith. The fact is that there are exceedingly few stocks in which the situation is so clear that mistakes are not easily made by cliques which may undertake to put them up or put them down. Of course, the stocks which are very closely held and the floating supply of which in consequence is exceedingly small can be taken in hand and put anywhere the insiders may desire, but it is also true of such issues that for the most part no large profit can be made out of such a movement for the reason that it is exceedingly difficult to secure for them a sufficiently large following to enable the insiders to turn more than a very limited amount of stock. On the other hand the active issues which have a very broad market are held in so many quarters and are so seldom absolutely in the control of any one set of men that frequently a strong market interest working in some direction will find some equally important interest opposing them, so that plans, no matter how well formed, very easily go astray.

It is probably safe to assume that more movements of the kind referred to are inaugurated and fail than those that meet with full success. Almost every day a movement is started in some stock or other, but as often as not peters out, as the expression is, and leaves the few who may have been quick to detect a market movement with the stock on their hands and obliged to wait some future opportunity to get rid of what they may have bought. Even the largest and most successful operators are frequently obliged to feel their way in many directions before they find a stock which happens to be in a position to favor their plan, and thus it not infrequently happens that several movements are started, to be carried only a short way before an opportunity is found to go ahead with a fair chance of success. Selling or buying to test the market is very frequently resorted to by operators, and with them it makes little difference if they find themselves short or long of a small amount of stock as the result of these preliminary efforts, but for their small followers the matter is frequently a more serious one, and accounts to some extent for the accusations of misrepresentation which are frequently heard even from those who have in no way been invited to join in the movement.

PENNSYLVANIA'S STRENGTH.

As a Holding Company Has Profited Largely by Advance in Securities—Sources of Increased Revenue.

One important result of the improvement in security values which has occurred during the past few months, and more particularly within recent weeks, is the strengthening of the position of a good many holding companies, including not a few of the important railroad companies which within the past few years have assumed more and more of the character of holding corporations. The improvement in individual credit as a result of increases in the value of investments is a subject of frequent comment, but not less important to large corporations are changes in the market value of the securities held by them. To what extent the affairs of life insurance and other companies which hold vast investments are affected by market quotations is indicated in the reports that from time to time find currency to the effect that an advance in the stock market is being manipulated in the interest of such corporations. During the time that the railroads were making so many temporary loans to tide over a period during which capitalists were disinclined to provide permanent funds for necessary improvements the Pennsylvania and other roads which resorted to temporary loans in many cases pledged securities of other corporations held by them. The increase in value of such securities which has recently taken place, if maintained, as the general belief is that it will be, will be of material help to the borrowers when the loans come to maturity. It is not thought that such loans will be extended, but the greater value of the securities underlying them would make their extension much easier, and the same increased value will materially help the flotation of permanent securities to take the place of the makeshift loans which for many months were a topic so universally discussed and about the merits of which there was so much difference of opinion.

The case of the Pennsylvania Railroad is typical and affords an interesting illustration of the importance of the recent market improvement to holding companies in general. In last week's market Pennsylvania was at various times one of the conspicuous features, and the movement in the stock was given a good deal of attention by those who follow closely the development of the stock market. In some quarters the improvement in the price of Pennsylvania from the low price of the year is attributed largely to the betterment in the affairs of the market for a number of its underlying securities, a betterment based at least in part on expectations that larger dividends on some of these properties are among the probabilities of the immediate future. One shrewd observer of the market summarized the position of the stock in this fashion:

"If some of the underlying properties of the Pennsylvania Railroad, including Norfolk and Western, Baltimore and Ohio, and Reading, should increase their dividends, which would go to a very considerable extent into the treasury of the Pennsylvania Railroad, permitting in turn an extra distribution to the Pennsylvania stockholders, then Pennsylvania is cheap at the present price. That some such plan is in contemplation, in fact, has been agreed upon in a tentative way, there are many who believe, and it would not be surprising to see this method adopted to make successful a further issue of Pennsylvania stock to take up the temporary $50,000,000 loan made by the Pennsylvania Company, which falls due next year."

The suggestion of increased dividends on some of the Pennsylvania underlying properties is in keeping with expectations that have been expressed for a long time. It is pointed out that the domination of Norfolk and Western, Chesapeake and Ohio, and Baltimore and Ohio by Pennsylvania and of Reading jointly by Lake Shore and Pennsylvania would assure an increase in the dividends on those properties should it be to the advantage of the Pennsylvania Railroad to increase its income from those sources, and there are many who are of the opinion that the opportunity is one that will not be neglected by the Pennsylvania's management.

Among the important holdings of Pennsylvania are $46,000,000 of Baltimore and Ohio common, $37,000,000 of the preferred, $10,000,000 Chesapeake and Ohio common, $20,000,000 Norfolk and Western common, and $5,500,000 of the preferred. Pennsylvania's interest in Reading, which amounts to about $6,000,000 first preferred, $14,000,000 second preferred, and $9,000,000 common, is held through the Baltimore and Ohio, which the Pennsylvania controls. Since March, when Pennsylvania reached the low price of the year—111¼—the improvement in these underlying securities amounts to about $13,000,000, and when it is considered that this group is the smaller part of the securities held by the Pennsylvania it is seen that the position of the company has been very materially strengthened by the stock market advance of the past few months.

COTTON IN BRITISH EMPIRE.

Reports That It Can Be Profitably Grown in Many Places.

Published by arrangement with The London Times.

LONDON, Sept 18.—A correspondent of The London Times writes:

While the cotton possibilities of Egypt proper would seem to be limited, those of the Soudan are almost illimitable. Cotton is already grown there, and last year some experiments carried out by the Soudan Government led to the conclusion that, with the advent of systematic cultivation, the available expanses of rich alluvial land might rank among the great cotton-producing centres of the world.

But though the Soudan is thus so full of promise, it is likely to remain a land of promise only until the construction of the Suakin-Berber Railway shall have provided the means of transport now lacking.

The cotton plant grows wild in nearly every district of both Northern and Southern Rhodesia, and samples of this uncultivated product were forwarded to experts in England two years ago. One of them was valued at about 5¼d. per pound, a figure which compared favorably with many American cottons sold in Liverpool.

Inquiries conducted in the coast (and especially the Tana River) districts of the British East Africa Protectorate by Mr. E. Brand, on behalf of the British Government, show that cotton will grow and mature its lint over a great portion of that territory even with such careless cultivation as the undirected native gives to it, and Mr. Brand considers that long staple cotton of excellent quality could be grown there equally well.

Experiments are now being conducted by the Ceylon Government with a view to ascertaining whether the cotton-growing which has been carried on in both the Cingalese and Tamil districts there on a small scale from time immemorial cannot be expanded into a large industry, capable of being worked on commercial lines. Investigations made sixteen years ago established the fact that every variety of cotton will grow in Ceylon, and led to the belief that the New Orleans and Egyptian varieties are best suited to Ceylon conditions, but the researches on the experimental plantations which the Government is now setting up in the north central territory will be on a much more exhaustive scale than before.

That Queensland soil and climate are well adapted to cotton cultivation is shown by the fact that between 1868 and 1882 cotton was exported from the colony to the extent of 12,000,000 pounds, though since then the industry has dwindled into very small proportions. According to the authorities of the Queensland Department of Agriculture the uplands variety could be well grown in the south, and Sea Island and Egyptian cotton in the north, and three tons of seed of these different varieties are being imported by the Government for experimental purposes.

Supply of Wheat Insufficient to Meet Demand.

HEAVY HOME CONSUMPTION

Elements Have Contributed to Reduce Crop—J. J. Hill's Prediction Promises to be Verified.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 24.—The present grain situation is the most peculiar known in half a century, with the exception of a short period during the civil war. Indeed, it is doubtful if there is a man now living who has seen a similar condition of affairs, where the demand for home consumption was so great and the export demand so small, while yet the crop promises to be deficient in supplying the demand for home consumption. With the European grain crop 120,000,000 bushels short, as reported, it needs no deep mathematical calculation to reach the conclusion that wheat will bring a high price before the May settlements are made, and that the farmer has a good thing in sight in all grains.

It is improbable that much grain will be exported during the next twelve months, though the shortage in Europe may cause foreigners to bid up the price and thus aid in sustaining the value in the markets of the United States. It appears now that the wheat yield of the country will not exceed 525,000,000 bushels as against 670,000,000 bushels for 1903, when exports were about 120,000,000 bushels, the lowest in many years, while the consumption for the same period was the largest in the history of the country.

Now, with the consumption increasing and absolutely nothing to export, and the consumption exceeding the home product, what may be expected? Unusually high prices—the demand exceeding the supply. These are the natural conditions. They are conditions confronting the millers and which are forcing them into a combine to minimize the loss at crops until the new grain can be bought and stored in the elevators. These are picturesque conditions and wholly outside the natural conditions and natural possibilities.

For several days the elements have contributed to dishearten the grain grower and reduce the yield. The thrasher is telling a tale of wheat yields far below the average, but it is the truth that the thrasher is now at work in the poorest fields of the Northwest, where rust did great damage. During the next two weeks thrashing machines will tell a different story, though the most sanguine do not concede an average yield of over ten bushels per acre for the entire Northwest. Indeed, should the average yield reach nine bushels per acre, the aggregate production for the three Northwest States will exceed that of last year by 20,000,000 bushels.

In a previous article it was asserted that the yield of Minnesota and the Dakotas would equal that of 1903 under favorable conditions. There is no reason to change these views provided the favorable conditions continue. In a talk with J. J. Hill that prince of crop experts declared to the writer that he believed the wheat yield, while 70,000,000 bushels under what it should be, would reach the yield of last year, and that other crops would bring the tonnage of railroads up to 25 per cent. greater than a year ago. It is not necessary for Mr. Hill to go into the wheat fields to know the prospects. Like any experienced student of crop conditions, he is able to form his estimate by conditions at seeding time. In May he said:

"We will not have a big crop of wheat. There will be many bad spots. The Spring has been too wet in some places and too dry in others. There will be early wheat and there will be late wheat. Both are likely to be damaged. But there will be a good crop which is neither early nor late nor too dry nor too wet."

During the past week the returns from the threshing machines have justified the above conclusions. The yield of wheat in the Dakotas, Minnesota, and Northern Wisconsin should be about as follows:

	Bushels.
North Dakota	45,000,000
Minnesota	68,000,000
South Dakota	30,000,000
Northern Wisconsin	18,000,000
Total	181,000,000

Last year, according to the Government estimate, the Dakotas and Minnesota raised 173,000,000 bushels of wheat. But in addition to this, and which should be figured in the Northwest receipts, is the yield of Montana—not less than 15,000,000 bushels tributary to the big Minnesota and Eastern mills, making a total of 196,000,000 bushels of wheat for the American Northwest, not including the Pacific Coast States.

GOLD IMPORT PROBABILITIES.

Outlook of Movement from London to New York Still Uncertain—Demand Here Not Urgent.

Predictions made a week ago in London, that New York would soon be drawing gold from that centre, were followed on Thursday last by a report that an engagement of $500,000 had actually been made for shipment to this city. While this particular report was pronounced in exchange circles as evidently a mistake, being probably nothing more than a misrepresentation of an engagement made in London for shipment to Egypt or some Continental point, the incident served to increase the discussion of the position of this market in regard to gold imports, with which, of course, is closely allied the course of foreign exchange in New York. The opinion is expressed that so long as the New York money market remains at about the present level there is no likelihood of gold being taken from London, unless the pressure from bills should become much greater than it has been during the past week, and the rate of exchange thereby forced a good deal lower. From this time on cotton bills should increase in quantity, and if the shipments of that staple to England and the Continent assume very large proportions, it is possible that a considerable amount of gold would be drawn to this centre, despite the rates for money here, which, although they have advanced materially during the past three weeks, are still relatively low. That such may be the case is rendered not improbable by the reports which come from the Manchester district to the effect that there is likely to be a decided revival in the cotton business there, following the setback which spinners experienced as a result of the difficulties thrown in their way last year by the speculative movement in cotton in American markets.

Further reductions in the surplus held by the New York City banks, which seem probable with the progress of the movement of the crops, would render the prospect of large gold imports a favorable factor, at least so far as speculation is concerned, which is always more or less stimulated by gold imports just as it is interfered with more or less by an outflow of the precious metal. To all appearances, however, London is more desirous of keeping the gold which it has than New York is to secure a share of it, and unless conditions here become such as to lessen the ease of the money market there would seem to be little likelihood of other factors being in themselves sufficient to counterbalance the London demand for the precious metal and bring it to this centre. Although the position of the Bank of England so far as reserves are concerned has for some weeks been decidedly strong, the price of bar gold was advanced in London during the last week, indicating apparently a desire on the part of the Bank of England to still further increase its reserve, which on Thursday last was reported at the relatively high figure of 58.85 per cent. It seems doubtful that the New York situation, even with the surplus reserve cut in half, as it has been during the past thirty days, is such as to call for competitive buying of gold in the London market.

Although the usual Summer decline in exchange rates was somewhat deferred this year, the price of demand sterling has now reached a point which is about normal for this date, and there are some exchange authorities who, while admiting that the decline may go still further, express the opinion that the rally in exchange rates which frequently occurs during the month of October will not this year be delayed, as was the earlier downward movement. Reports have been current during the last week to the effect that a very considerable amount of American stocks which have been held on the other side have recently been sold in this market, sales having been induced by the sharp advance in prices, and color was given to these reports by the fact that foreign houses were large borrowers of a number of stocks, presumably against sales made for foreign account. Such a movement, if it has assumed the volume ascribed to it in some quarters, will be a substantial factor in the exchange market, and by increasing the remittances which local bankers will have to make to the other side will serve to offset the indebtedness incurred here by foreigners through the purchase of cotton and other American products. But with all it is admitted that the question of gold exports it still surrounded by much uncertainty. Sharp movements in sterling exchange here have been unusually frequent this year, and, of course, the situation would be materially changed by further declines, such as occurred during the past week, but as matters stand at the moment most exchange authorities are loath to make predictions in regard to the probability of a large increase to our supply of gold as a result of receipts from abroad.

Told 'Round the Ticker.

THOMAS F. RYAN has for several months been in the habit of calling two or three times a week at August Belmont's office. Then his calls ceased, but on Friday he went over there once more. Yesterday Metropolitan shares declined in the market, and a wise man in the Street remarked that he would not care to buy "Met." until some day August Belmont should call on Mr. Ryan.

J. BRUCE ISMAY, who sailed for London last week, is to return to this country late in November or early in December. If he keeps up this traveling back and forth he will soon have equaled the record of Charles M. Schwab, who has crossed the pond five times in one year.

CHARLES G. GATES'S purchase of a seat on the Philadelphia Stock Exchange for $6,000 last week makes Mr. Gates, so it is said, a member of more Exchanges than any other man in the Street, exceeding even the variety of memberships held by Daniel J. Sully in the zenith of his glory.

H. O. HAVEMEYER of the American Sugar Refining Company will take a three weeks' trip through the West, starting on Oct. 3. He will be accompanied by a party of friends, and the object of the visit is to inspect the beet sugar refineries in Colorado and Michigan, in which the American Sugar Refining Company is interested. The party will make a short stop at St. Louis.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr., has decided to attend the annual meeting of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, to be held in Denver. Mr. Rockefeller is said to be as deeply interested in that concern as he is in his Sunday school. Like the latter, Colorado Fuel is in constant need of funds.

ROSWELL MILLER, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, has gone to Milwaukee to attend the annual meeting of that road. F. S. Bond, Peter Geddes, and C. W. Harkness, Directors of the road, went with him.

A. B. LEACH of Farson, Leach & Co. intends leaving the early part of this week, with a party of capitalists from this city, for a tour of inspection of a water-power plant, situated near Montreal, in which he is interested.

FRITZ ACKERMANN, the Standard Oil specialist on the curb, had better return before long, according to some of his friends, from his little vacation, which he is now enjoying, for otherwise his pet stock may break a further 10 points, as it did last week.

RAFAEL R. GOVIN, a member of the banking house of H. B. Hollins & Co. and Vice President and Director of the Havana Tobacco Company, who has been away, returned to his office the beginning of last week.

L. E. WHICHER, the Exchange member of the firm of Ives & Whicher, was one of a party of fifteen which started last Thursday for Greenwood, B. C., for an inspection of the properties of the Montreal and Boston Consolidated Mining Company, which recently acquired a number of mines in that section.

TROLLEY AND STEAM ROADS

New Haven System's Expectations Not Yet Realized.

PROFIT IN JOINT OPERATION

Suburban Passenger Traffic Excessively Expensive.

The New York, New Haven and Hartford, which has for years paid its dividends out of earnings resulting from passenger traffic, last week issued its annual report, which contained the following sentences:

"The present cost of doing the suburban business upon our lines is excessive, and it is only by increasing the volume largely we can hope for remuneration. To handle the same as at present is a burden, and to increase the volume and reduce cost through substitution of electricity for steam, seems the only solution.

"All of the interests acquired by your company in street railways have been transferred to the Consolidated Railway Company, the capital stock of which is all owned by your company.

"So far as the operation of the properties since their acquisition discloses anything, the investment appears to be a wise one from a financial standpoint, and it protects and supplements the system of roads operated by your company in a way that must be of great value in the future."

This reference to the constantly pressing problem of trolley competition for suburban and even longer distance passenger traffic again calls attention to the fact that we are now close upon a new era in transportation. Since 1890 the building of trolley lines has gradually left far behind the construction of new railroads, until today the electric line has become more than a formidable competitor of steam railroads in that the new motive power threatens to soon do away entirely with the steam locomotive, except perhaps for the purpose of hauling low-grade freight.

According to the report of the New Haven system, its operating expenses amounted to 72.82 per cent. of the gross earnings, a very high percentage and greatly in excess of the operating expenses of other railroads which depend more largely on the transportation of freight for their dividend-paying power. President Wilcox of the Delaware and Hudson Company, which has felt the competition with a double-track, third-rail electric line, the Lackawanna and Wyoming Valley, expressed the general sentiment among railroad men when he said that the passenger traffic of the large railroad lines was a necessary but not a lucrative part of the business. The main profit in steam railroads lay in the hauling of low-grade freight, and that it would be a relief to many lines if trolley companies would take a part of the local passenger business. Besides the local passenger business there is another class of business which trolley lines are better equipped to handle than steam railroads, and that is the small package freight and express business in suburban and short-haul country traffic.

But the existence of independent trolley lines for the handling of such business is considered by many railroad men as a menace to the supremacy of the steam railroads, and so many of the railroads have deemed it advisable to take over such competitive lines and to fit them into the steam railroad system so as to get out of their operation the maximum in earnings with the minimum in competition. This is what the New Haven has done. The purchase has been of too recent occurence to show in the annual report for last year, yet there is much speculation as to the showing which will be made. According to one authority the electric lines bought by the New Haven have been earning only about 2½ per cent. on their capital stock after operating expenses and fixed charges. This is not a very profitable operation, and is at variance with the general understanding that trolley lines can be operated for 50 per cent. and less of gross earnings, and that if properly handled they not only pay interest on bonded debt, but also profitable dividends. In this connection it must of course be remembered that the actual cost of original construction is much less in the case of trolley lines than in the case of railroads, though against this must be set off the lower rates of fare charged by the electric lines. While steam railroads get an average fare of 2.003 cents a mile, electric lines get only 1.3 cents per mile. Even so, it is estimated that the average earnings of steam railroads from passenger traffic is only $1,674 per mile, while the earnings of electric lines averaged together are estimated to be $3,900 per mile. It will be interesting to learn in how far operation of trolley lines in conjunction, instead of in competition, with steam railroads will affect these figures of earnings.

NEW NICARAGUA RAILROAD.

German Capitalists Receive a Concession to Build.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—The following extract from Export, a German commercial paper, tells of a new German railroad projected in Nicaragua:

"Attention has already been called to the fact that the Germans are beaten by others in getting concessions in Nicaragua. There is, however, one concession which is in the hands of the Germans—that for building a railroad from Lake Nicaragua to the Atlantic Ocean.

"The line will extend from San Miguellio in a northeasterly direction through the Province of Chontales to the River Tule, which has an altitude of 638 feet; thence to the Rio Punta Gorda, or Rama, and along this to Monkey Point, where a harbor will be built. This place has great natural advantages as a harbor. Formerly most of the shipping has gone by Corinto.

"The road, which will be about ninety-two miles in length, will pass through very fertile regions specially suitable for farming and cattle raising.

"The Mosquito reservation and the land on both sides of the River San Juan are open for settlement. The President and his colleagues, as well as the American Consul, have received tracts of land which will be sold to foreign companies for a good remuneration.

"The building of the Panama Canal, which should last ten years, will insure high prices for cattle. The country is also well adapted for growing bananas, caoutchouc, and cocoanuts. There are large forests of mahogany, cedar, and other fine woods. The President has a lively interest in the building of the road."

JAPAN'S INCREASED TRADE.

The dullness of trade experienced in Japan during a large part of the past year owing to the imminence of war and the necessity for preparation has now passed to a marked degree, and for the six months of the present year there has been a gain of about 9½ per cent. in activity over the corresponding period of 1903. Purchases of war material, which have been very large, particularly in this country, would explain partially for this improvement, but in exports, which naturally would be decreased rather than otherwise by war, there is an improvement of about a similar amount as the imports, or 9 per cent.

A feature of the imports was that they consisted largely of raw materials intended for the manufacture of articles at home, and in some instances importations increased more than 100 per cent. This large increase was in phosphatic manure, which was for use in the fields to give a larger yield of agricultural products, which clearly demonstrates that peaceful occupations are not being neglected, notwithstanding the heavy drain upon the country in men and money. Although imports of coal increased from about 49,000 tons in 1903 to 382,755 in 1904, this was not owing to the cessation of mining in Japan, as more than 1,500,000 tons of other grades than those imported were shipped to foreign countries.

More Business and Interest Than Usual on a Half Holiday — Atchison and Steel Features of Strength.

The Stock Exchange yesterday was less of a debating society upon the bank statement than customarily. It had a brand-new mystery in the shape of the meaning of the alleged and unconfirmed transfer of 420,000 shares of Atchison from the bankers of the Union Pacific Railway to Standard Oil owners, and there was fresh strength in the Steels upon agreeable accounts of improving conditions in the industry. The Grangers were also strong, possibly upon the statement, which certainly reads amusingly although not intended for a jest, that a little frost now would help the corn crop. It will apparently have to worry along without it, for the weather has moderated enough to stimulate the wheat market, which is less in need of frost. Metropolitan was the only representative stock to drop a point, in curious disregard of the fact that it stands to profit more by the opening of the Williamsburg Bridge than it will lose by the opening of the subway. At the present bridge terminus it divides the largest traffic centre in the city with the underground, but it will have speedily a monopoly of an equal volume of travel which can become tributary to Interborough or the elevated only over the Metropolitan system. The underground's north and south business is in urgent need of east and west distribution and feeding for its highest efficiency and the greatest convenience of the traveling public. Metropolitan can have no objection to taking the short and profitable cross-town business for itself, and leaving to the Interborough the long, or through, up and down town business which it can alone do profitably. Apart or together, the two systems are complementary, and there is no way for either to do a permanently lessening business.

The bank statement showed a loss of surplus of over $3,000,000, and was good in the sense that the loss is less than it has been recently or than might have been expected. It was made so by the first decrease of loans in a month, a decline of three millions taking the place of an average increase of ten millions. With a 2 per cent. money market and a surplus larger than for ten years, and larger than the total loss of reserves for a month from this time last year, it is scarcely a duty to spring any alarums just now. There is something else to be considered than the visible supply of cash. The invisible supply—meaning the condition of our foreign and domestic credit—is equally important, and it is in every sense reassuring. London knew about our decrease of loans before we did, because the loans were largely shifted to London. If this can happen in the present condition of our money market it is difficult to say what relief may not be reckoned upon if we make it worth London's while. And in the background are the trust company resources, while the comparative inactivity of trade makes the task of financing the crop movement easier than it has been for some years. But an annual contraction of business and liquidation of loans as a habitual incident of getting our crops to market, with an administration taking credit for its management of our monetary affairs—it is to laugh.

AUCTION—A LA PENAL CODE.

Yesterday's auction sale of the interest of the estate of Richard Somerindike in an old road or lane which ran west from Broadway, just south of Seventy-sixth Street, furnished not a little entertainment and instruction for the small gathering which happened to be on hand at noon in the Real Estate Salesroom.

The old lane, which was about 20 feet in width, branched off from Broadway, 37 feet south of Seventy-sixth Street, and extended toward the Hudson River a distance of about 400 feet. As the streets and ownerships stand to-day it traverses six parcels upon which are various dwellings and apartment houses. The sale apparently was held for the purpose of clearing the title to these properties, the strip of land being offered in six parcels with the present lot lines marking the divisions.

One parcel, the most westerly of the six and most remote from Broadway, was offered, and was bought in by Robert Goodbody, owner of the property on which it is located, for $100. The bit of lane next to the east went to Alexander McDowell for $100, he similarly being the present adverse claimant. For the third parcel, there being no immediate bid, an outsider conceived the bright idea of offering $10, whereupon he was brought up with a sharp turn by the attorney and auctioneer, and had the Penal Code clause expounded to him.

This, it appears, makes it impossible for anybody to bid at a sale of this character except the owner now in possession. Two more parcels were struck down in accordance with these conditions by Auctioneer Berrian—one for $100 and the other for $50. For the two remaining pieces no representative of the owner was present and they were withdrawn.

"Say," remarked the man who had tried to make the ten-dollar bid as he left the salesroom, "this comes pretty close to answering the question, 'When is an auction not an auction?'"

LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE

Another Week of Easy Money and Small Trading.

PUBLIC STILL HOLDS ALOOF

Depression and a Certain Amount of Weakness in Almost Every Department as a Result.

Special Cable to The New York Times.
Copyright, 1904, The New York Times.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—This has been another week of easy money and small trading, the public still shunning the Stock Exchange and leaving it pretty much to professionals. The failure of outsiders to make purchases undoubtedly tended to lessen the cheerfulness that has pervaded the market, and in almost every department there were depression and a certain amount of weakness.

All the home and colonial Government securities were a trifle lower than last week, consols being off an eighth and other stocks from a quarter to a half.

There have been no notable developments in the foreign section. War stocks hold about the same positions as last week, Russians keeping remarkably steady, while Japanese are practically where they were left at the close of the nearest slump.

British rails flourished early in the week, but succumbed later to poor traffic returns, so that glancing through the quotation list of these stocks one sees an almost uninterrupted series of minus signs.

American rails have fluctuated, speculators here governing themselves largely by the developments on the New York Exchange. The tone in this department has been fairly good, but there have been many reactions, so that at the close most Americans were lower than last week.

DECLARED DIVIDENDS

NOTE.—Where the closing of the books of a company occurs on a Saturday its shares, if dealt in on the Stock Exchange, are quoted "ex dividend" on the previous day.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Steel Stocks Strong—Heavy Selling by London—Accumulation of Atchison.

Fairly heavy selling by London following irregular movements in American stocks in that market failed to exert material effect upon stock market prices yesterday, and in some of the active issues substantial net gains were recorded. London was more than usually active for a Saturday, but almost exclusively on the selling side. About 30,000 shares, largely made up of United States Steel and Atchison, were sold for foreign account, indicating a willingness abroad to profit by the advances in those stocks to take profits on previous purchases. Locally the disposition of traders seemed to be to carry still further the recoveries which had been brought about after the declines early in the week, and in some issues their efforts were re-enforced by more or less general buying.

Bull Movement in Steel.

United States Steel preferred was bought by a number of prominent houses, including some which at times in the past have been credited with acting on the short side in the stock for some important interests. The buying was effective in advancing prices and was looked upon as decidedly good. The probability of the disintegration of the local building strike, which has already been very much weakened by secessions, has for some days been used as a bull argument on Steel and has been offered as one of the reasons for the extensive buying of the stock.

Stop Orders in Metropolitan.

The weakness in Metropolitan was due to selling by a house prominently identified with local traction interests and by one of the large traders. It was said that it had been discovered that a number of stop orders were in the market and the offering down of the Metropolitan was supposed to be for the purpose of bringing out this stock.

Position of Atchison.

Atchison was very strong in the early trading, and despite the reaction which occurred later closed with a fractional net gain. The accumulation of Atchison by bankers closely associated with Union Pacific interests, which is believed to have been going on for a long time, is looked upon as a move likely to strengthen the harmony in the Western railroad world rather than to threaten that harmony. That in some quarters there is doubt that the bankers who have been buying Atchison have been acting for Union Pacific rather than for some other property is evidenced by Friday's report that the stock had been secured in the interest of St. Paul.

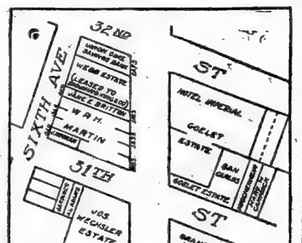
WHERE BROADWAY VALUES SHOW LITTLE MOVEMENT

Blocks from Madison Square to Thirty-second Street in Transition Stage—Northward Tendency of Hotel and Amusement Centre—Prices To-day and Ten Years Ago.

From the time ten or fifteen years ago, when Broadway, between Twenty-third and Thirty-third Streets, with its hotels and theatres, was perhaps the most prominent of up-town centres, that territory has been experiencing a transition period, and much of its property has been in the position of being intrinsically valuable, but with little to indicate what would be the most desirable and most profitable form of improvement.

Within this period nobody has seen fit to build a theatre there, in the face of the steady movement of the theatrical centre to Times Square; those office buildings which have been tried on and near Madison Square have not been instantaneous successes, while the erection of a new hotel on the old Sturtevant site, at Broadway and Twenty-ninth Street, marks the most recent effort in the redevelopment of property in that neighborhood. That the latter property was on the market continuously for seven or eight years, until the United States Realty Company bought it two years ago, is good evidence of the indeterminate future of these Broadway blocks. The new hotel will have an important bearing upon the whole problem, and it will doubtless be a matter of considerable importance to neighboring owners to see how far it will fulfill the expectations of its owners and promoters.

As a whole, the blocks shown in the accompanying diagram have shown little enhancement in value within the last decade, although there has been some advance



In the more northerly ones as a result of the establishment of the new retail centre at Broadway and Thirty-fourth Street, and through the influence of the Pennsylvania Railroad project. At auction last year W. R. H. Martin paid $381,000 for the northwest corner of Broadway and Thirty-first Street, a plot of about 5,000 square feet, having also a frontage on Sixth Avenue. Mr. Martin already owned a half interest in the property, but the price may be regarded as a representative one, since he had outside competition almost up to the knock-down figure. This is at the rate of something over $100 a square foot. No approach to this price, however, has been shown in any other recent Broadway deal between Madison Square and Thirty-second Street, and the frequent instances of higher figures between Thirty-fourth Street and Times Square indicate how, at least for the time being, real estate speculation and investment have jumped over the former stretch of the city's big thoroughfare.

The Sturtevant House corner at Twenty-ninth Street, after having been held at $1,500,000 and involved in various negotiations at figures around $1,200,000, was finally sold for $1,000,000, or about $65 a square foot—the site containing 15,525 square feet. Other deals for neighboring properties during the last five years show approximately the same figure. What was formerly the Hotel Victoria annex, at the northeast corner of Twenty-sixth Street, bought by Frederick Ayer of Boston from the Ritchie estate in 1900, brought $382,500. Its area is nearly 6,000 square feet. A year later Mr. Ayer bought the adjoining parcel on the north, 1,146 Broadway, 25.6 by 91, for $127,500. In the block between Twenty-seventh and Twenty-eighth Streets, 1,166 Broadway, 26.5 by 99.5, was sold under foreclosure four years ago to Mrs. Caroline H. Johnston for $148,085, and has since been incorporated in the site of the office building erected by her at that point.

Between Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth Streets, the properties 1,204 to 1,210 Broadway, next to the Gilsey House, on an irregular plot consisting of a little over two lots, were put up at auction about a year ago. The representatives of the owners, the Alvord estate, bought them in at $333,000, their most vigorous competitors in the bidding being Flake & Dowling, who did not retire until $330,000 had been reached—again about $60 a square foot.

With these figures in mind it is interesting to look back at the records of 1893, when Joseph Wechsler bought the southwest corner of Broadway and Thirty-first Street, and find a price so little below the present level. The transfer of this corner, a plot containing about 12,300 square feet and covered at that time with old two and three story structures, showed a consideration of $700,000, making the rate per square foot about $57.

What lines the future development of these blocks between Madison Square and Thirty-third Street will follow few real estate men will venture to predict. It promises to be a gradual rather than a rapid growth, resulting from the steady up-town progress of business. If the section is gradually losing some of its pre-eminence as a centre of amusement and activity at night, it is making an equivalent gain along more substantial lines. It will be within the territory to be favorably affected by the Pennsylvania tunnel, and the actual completion of that enterprise may be expected to give great impetus to the commercial development of the entire area between Twenty-third and Thirty-third Streets. With the shelving of the proposed plan to build a subway down Broadway from Forty-second Street to Union Square, very largely as the result of protests on the part of abutting property owners, there is apparently no change in local transportation facilities that can have any very marked effect upon this neighborhood.

Transports Ordered Out of Commission.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—Gen. Humphrey, Quartermaster General, has ordered that the army transports at New York, the Kilpatrick, Sumner, and McClellan, be placed out of commission. They are now anchored in Erie Basin and will remain there until they are needed.

INSTRUCTION.

A Boy That Failed
to make progress at a noted New England academy entered the Groff School recently with several having had similar experiences at other large schools. They were all put into Yale and other large colleges the following September without a condition, one year ahead of their former classmates, and their present standing at college is very high. Mr. Groff's experience with these boys is typical of the success he has had for ten years.
THE GROFF SCHOOL,

The FINCH SCHOOL BOARDING AND DAY SCHO

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

If opinions are of any value in determining the future of the real estate market, there is much encouragement to be had from the views of prominent brokers and operators, who are rapidly getting back into harness after a Summer in Europe, or who, at any rate, have not spent any considerable portion of the last three months in pursuing the real estate bargain or the eligible building site. The belief that there will be a little business of importance until after election seems to be as popular as ever this year, but there are also very general expressions of confidence that the Winter and Spring seasons will develop no small amount of activity in those higher grades of property for which there has been practically no market for a year and a half or more.

That this period of inactivity has had a decidedly wholesome effect cannot be denied. The movement which culminated in the overspeculation and overbuilding of some classes of property in 1902 would probably have fallen of its own weight had it not been checked by a building tie-up, a Wall Street decline, and several months of tight mortgage money. In the meantime, a readjustment has taken place, and now, fortunately, the disturbing influences bid fair to be removed. With the possible exception of office buildings, no type of structure shows a supply much greater than the demand. Even the much-abused apartment hotel is entering upon a more promising era. Mortgage money is more plentiful, the latest outcrop of building trades disturbance is losing its threatening aspect very rapidly nowadays, and every phase of the present situation indicates that the next few months will witness a large number of operations preliminary to new construction.

The opening of the subway, furthermore, may be expected to give an additional impetus to new building, not only on Washington Heights, but also in those neighborhoods which are tributary to it south of Fifty-ninth Street. Values have been perhaps abundantly discounted in these sections for some time to come. While the effect of the underground road upon contiguous properties has been forecast in a general way at many points, yet there is a disposition on the part of owners of many desirable properties to wait until the road is in actual operation before committing themselves definitely to any particular form of improvement. They feel that, after the tunnel has been in actual use by the public for even a brief period, new conditions, perhaps of vital importance, will be apparent at one point and another, and that it will be better to forfeit carrying charges on a property for a year or so and then be able to deal with facts, than to go ahead on the basis of probabilities, and perhaps come out with a structure unsuited to its surroundings in some important detail. At least one operation which will involve between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 is being temporarily held up by these exact circumstances.

Of current business, along lines that have been followed pretty closely for two or three months, there is little to be said by way of comment. A slight increase in volume may be noted, and the fact that the number of transactions reported last week was double that of the corresponding week last year is sufficiently evidence that the investment buying of small properties, with its accompanying speculation, has not yet run its course. The building movement in the Bronx continues to show unusual strength. Out of fourteen building loans recorded last week, ten were for Bronx operations, and the source of the funds in several instances shows that some of the largest and most conservative lending institutions are well satisfied as to the substantial character of this Bronx business.

Both in the easterly and westerly parts of Harlem builders are finding little difficulty in disposing of new structures. The company which put up seven apartment houses at the Seventh Avenue end of the Crimmins Block, between One Hundred and Forty-third and One Hundred and Forty-fourth Streets, has sold all but one of them, while another builder closed out last week the last of five forty-foot buildings, not yet completed, on One Hundred and Forty-second Street, between Seventh and Eighth Avenues. The upper east side affords no instances so conspicuous as these, but the sales of new tenements north of One Hundredth Street and east of Madison Avenue are of almost daily occurrence.

Dealing in vacant property has been confined to two sections. Three Amsterdam Avenue corners on Morningside Heights, at One Hundred and Twenty-first and One Hundred and Twenty-second Streets, have changed hands within a few days, the buyers of two of them being builders. The territory around the extreme upper end of Eighth Avenue also developed considerable activity, what with the sales of nine lots on One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Street and of corners on Bradhurst Avenue, at One Hundred and Forty-seventh and One Hundred and Fifty-first Streets.

Despite the fact that Oct. 1 is almost at hand, there is still a good demand for west side houses, particularly between Amsterdam Avenue and Riverside Drive, in the district to be benefited by the subway. Much immediate advantage to the same territory has also resulted from the change in routes recently inaugurated upon the Metropolitan surface lines, giving direct access without transfer from upper Broadway and Amsterdam Avenue to the hotel, theatre, and shopping districts. This direct line down Broadway means a very considerable saving in time from all points reached by the Broadway and Amsterdam Avenue lines, amounting, it is said, to over fifteen minutes in a trip from One Hundred and Twenty-fifth to Houston Street.

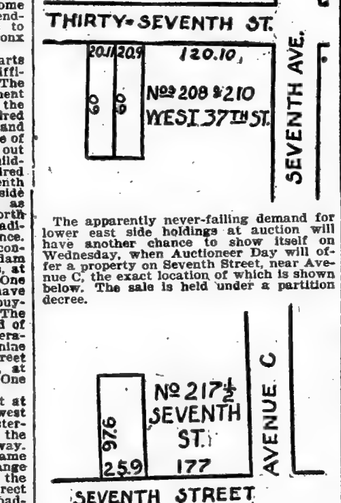
THE AUCTION ROOM.

Salesroom lists continue to be wholly lacking in items which might arouse any general interest. A total of fourteen offerings, nine of which are in the Bronx, is the scant supply from which auction room frequenters will have to make selections this week. Selling will be confined to three days, there being no offerings scheduled for either to-morrow or Friday.

Only one voluntary sale is announced, that of 645 Lexington Avenue, near Fifty-fourth Street, a five-story brick flat, on lot 25 by 100, to be put up on Tuesday by Peter F. Meyer.

The parcels shown in the following diagram, close to that section of Seventh Avenue just north of the Pennsylvania terminal, may enlist some attention on the part of speculators. The amount of the judgment against the properties, which will be sold on Thursday by L. J. Phillips & Co. is about $23,500.



The apparently never-failing demand for lower east side holdings at auction will have another chance to show itself on Wednesday, when Auctioneer Day will offer a property on Seventh Street, near Avenue C, the exact location of which is shown below. The sale is held under a partition decree.

Other foreclosure sales scheduled this week include a dwelling on One Hundred and Twentieth Street, near Mount Morris Park, and that at 107 West One Hundred and Thirty-third Street, near Lenox Avenue.

Among the nine Bronx offerings will be noticed a corner, 50 by 75, at College Avenue and One Hundred and Forty-eighth Street, to be sold in addition on Wednesday by Auctioneer Smyth, and two large plots on Morris Avenue, at One Hundred and Eighty-first and One Hundred and Eighty-third Streets, to be put up on the same day at the stand of George R. Read & Co.

THE MAN IN THE STREET

Copyright, 1904, The New York Times Company.

J. HAMILTON LEWIS, ex-Congressman from the State of Washington, is authority for the following story:

"I was in Geneva, deah boy, just before I sailed, and do you know, I was amazed when I was shown a paragraph in a newspaper to this effect: 'Judge Parker, the newly elected President of America, has changed the name of the capital from Washington to Rosemount, in honor of his predecessor in office.'"

WHEN Congressman Kitchen of North Carolina visited a strange town not long ago he found out that his razor was badly in need of sharpening. He dropped in at the local barber's shop and gave his razor to the proprietor, a large, fat negro.

"Have it ready by six o'clock," the Congressman directed. "I'll come by for it."

He was there at the appointed time; but the blade had not been sharpened

"Sorry, boss," said the negro, "but Ah jes cudn't git it fixed in time."

"Well, well, that's bad," answered Mr. Kitchen. "I've got to go to a party to-night."

At this the barber suddenly went into the back of his shop and much to the distinguished visitor's surprise brought out a blade with six or seven deep notches in it.

"Yer c'n use dis, boss," he said, holding it out.

"Why, what do you mean? What can I do with that razor?"

"It's all right, boss," said the negro in an injured tone. "It's de one I allus carries w'en I goes to a party."

FREDERICK HOWARD WINES, formerly Secretary of the State Board of Charities of the State of Illinois, told a little story the other day at the Summer School of Philanthropy which is interesting in a Presidential campaign year.

"I sat on the platform in the convention which nominated Mr. Blaine for the Presidency in Chicago," said he. "When his nomination was announced the scene of uproar began. The hall was filled with a maniac yell, flags were broken to bits, men were almost stripped of their clothing and trodden under foot in the excitement. I said to the daughter of a United States Senator who sat beside me: 'Carrie, I'm going to see how long this lasts.' I took out my watch, timed it, and it lasted exactly thirty minutes. I said to her again: 'Carrie, I shall meet up with some of these men in the insane asylums of the State of Illinois yet.'

"Afterward I encountered three men who were in that yelling throng that day in Illinois insane asylums."

EDDIE FOY tells of a man who was attacked by a bulldog belonging to a friend.

Fortunately the man was not injured by the canine's onslaught, but escaped with a torn coat. The owner offered profuse apologies for the misbehavior of the dog, and insisted upon making good the cost of the damaged garment. When the friends had said good-bye, the owner of the dog remarked:

"Really, I must get a sign bidding people beware of the beast."

"An excellent idea," agreed the man attacked. "I'll get my dentist to send you one of his."

"Why a dentist's sign?" asked the dog's owner.

"Because," replied the other, "it says, 'Teeth inserted here.'"

TIMOTHY L. WOODRUFF, in discussing New York State politics privately with a friend some time ago, and referring to the Platt-Odell feud, told the following story:

"There was a young man," he said, "who lived in a Harlem flat. He was always blowing his own horn. He was trying to master the blows and stops of a cornet, much to the annoyance of his neighbors. Out of patience one night, from loss of sleep, the man in the flat above him rushed down in his nightrobe and, knocking on his door, exclaimed:

"'For heaven's sake, man, don't you know that you are detroying the peace of the neighborhood?'

"'None of your business,' came the voice from within. 'I pay for this flat, and I am going to do as I choose in it.'

"His infuriated neighbor went upstairs, resolving to get square. He stuffed all the stops in the basins and bathrooms, turned on the water full force, and then went to bed. It was but a short time before the half-drowned cornetist came over the footolman's face as he remarked resignedly:

"Aweel, I'll s'en hae to use one o' my ain."

FRIENDS of Judge Alfred Colt of the Probate Court at New London, Conn., have cost him many dinners lately by a joke of which his sixteen-year-old daughter Gertrude was the promulgator.

The Judge, accompanied by his daughter, can be seen bathing early every morning. Both are experts, and often swim out far from sight. A few mornings ago they had got about fifty yards from shore when the Judge, who by the way is a very religious man, exclaimed in agony:

"Daughter, I've got a cramp. Save yourself and swim to shore!" And he lifted his eyes upward as if in prayer. But his daughter dived down back of him and extracted from the giant member of his pedal extremity a large cow crab. Both then swam to shore. That night on the veranda of Judge Colt's home he was relating the experience.

"Dad," said his daughter Gertrude affectionately, "do you know what you said in your prayer at that time?"

"Certainly," replied the Judge. "I quoted 'Thy will be done.'

"'No,' said his daughter, 'you didn't. You said 'Thy will be filed.'"

PROF. HENRY A. BEERS, who holds the Yale record for absent-mindedness, was to meet his senior class in English literature at the university one afternoon. When his students arrived at the recitation hall they found pasted on the door this notice: "Have gone to the library. Will return in fifteen minutes. Beers."

About a quarter of an hour later Prof. Beers appeared, nodded pleasantly to his waiting class; then, after carefully reading his notice, he walked over to a tree, sat down, and waited for himself to come back.

NATIONAL CHAIRMAN GEORGE B. CORTELYOU has become noted in this campaign for his universal system of reticence. He daily receives the political reporters, but his invariable reply to questions is that he never talks for publication.

A crowd of newspaper men were standing in front of Republican headquarters at 1 Madison Avenue several days ago debating whether it was worth while to see the National Chairman, and at that time a nickname for him was born which is likely to stick to him through the campaign.

"Oh, let's go up and see. Cant tell-you," said one of the newspaper men.

BANDMASTERS Sousa and Fanciulli met at the exposition in St. Louis the other day. Said Fanciulli:

"I understand that your new composition is making a hit?"

"Well, it looks that way," replied Scusa, "but in spite of that fact I am conceited enough to imagine it really possesses some elements of merit."

EX-SENATOR DAVIS is not in the least sensitive about his age, and stands a lot of chaffing on the subject. While at Democratic headquarters the other day he transacted about three times the business of an ordinary man. When he had nearly finished his tasks a Brooklyn leader who was watching him said:

"Senator, were you always a hustler?"

"Reckon I was," he replied.

"Well, you'll never rust out."

"Probably not. I have to keep going. It's my nature."

"Mighty good thing," observed the Brooklynite. "Makes me think of an Irishman's first introduction to old brandy. He had been treated to a very fine fifty-year-old make. After he drank some he was asked for his opinion.

"'Be jabers, it staggers me,' he exclaimed. 'If it's this foine at fifty years it must have been more electrifying than radium when it wuz fresh!'"

EX-JUDGE JULIUS M. MAYER, the Republican candidate for Attorney General, has long been active in politics, though he is only thirty-nine years old. His earlier experiences were not uniformly satisfactory. In 1894 he was a candidate for nomination for the Assembly. The local leaders assured him of their support, and, just before the convention, told him to walk up and down in front of the hall, to be on hand when a committee should summon him to accept the nomination. It was a cold October night, and he walked back and forth briskly.

Presently he noticed another man apparently doing the same thing. They finally met in front of the hall. They conversed and Mayer adroitly extracted the information that the other man also expected the nomination. The two soon separated.

A half hour later a committee emerged from the convention and approached the other man. Mayer turned up his coat collar and went home, but neither the man who supplanted him nor the leaders who betrayed him are now influential politically in that section of the city.

IN one of the Episcopal churches of the city, according to District Attorney Jerome, there was once an old woman who insisted on bowing her head every time the name of Satan was mentioned during the service or sermon. The rector, after noting this eccentricity for many months, asked her:

"Madam, why do you bow at the name of Satan? It is not customary, you know."

"Oh, I know that," said she, "but it wuz fresh!'"

WILLIAM BARNES, Jr., Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Republican State Committee, gave early evidence of the boldness and determination which have marked his career both as the boss of Albany County and a leader of his party in the State. Having determined to become State Committeeman from his district, a position which generally and in his case surely carried leadership with it, he sent for a score of men who collectively controlled Republican politics in his vicinity. He addressed them somewhat after this fashion:

"I am a candidate for the position of State Committeeman. Do not deceive yourselves. I do not want the place for one year, or two years only. I am thirty-five years old now. I am in good health. I shall probably live to be seventy. That means that I shall desire to be State Committeeman for the next thirty-five years. And what I want I'm going to get."

"As to the last," added Mr. Barnes, recalling the incident, "I was not sure I could make good. But that was what I told them."

JOSEPH C. HENDRIX, President of the National Bank of Commerce, at the Bankers' Convention the other day told the story of a lady who was so cross-eyed that when she cried the tears rolled down her back. A friend suggested that she visit a noted specialist for the eyes. She followed the suggestion, but said to the physician: "Doctor, I'm sure you won't be able to cure me!" "Oh, yes, I can," replied the specialist, "I shall treat you for bacteria." (Back Tearia.)

COL. "BOB" TOWNSEND, one of District Attorney Jerome's assistants, who is soon to blossom forth as the author of a book on his experiences in the criminal courts, added a new one to his fund of stories in trying a burglar case last week. A Hebrew tailor of the east side had testified that the young defendant on trial had awakened him at night by picking the lock on his door, and afterward breaking the chain which was fastened on the inside. On cross-examination the defendant's lawyer asked the witness:

"How did the defendant manage to break the chain which was fastened on the inside of your door?"

"Ask him," was the quick response. "That's his business. I'm a tailor. He's a t'ief."

JOHN BARBER of the Pittsburg Stock Exchange tells of a hustling young solicitor for a New York publishing house. The youth was vainly trying to sell a set of books to a Philadelphia bank cashier, and at last got so excited he accused the cashier of being slower than molasses in January.

"You people here can't even eat snails!" he said.

"Why not?" asked the cashier.

"You can't catch them!"

F. CARRUTHERS GOULD ON NATIONAL TYPES

The Famous English Caricaturist Discusses John Bull and Cousin Jonathan as They Generally Are Not.

(Copyright, 1904, The New York Times.

A CONTINENTAL CARAVANSERAI, where are collected, like a human menagerie, specimens of all the human races which have been driven by the exigencies of civilization to take holidays, is interesting from many points of view, humorous as well as serious. A tourist from Mars alighting in such a place would find it difficult to identify the various nationalities if he relied for guidance upon the illustrations of the different types as they appear in the pages of comic papers.

Take two examples, the Englishman and the American. The Martian will naturally expect to see them personified in the shapes of John Bull and Cousin Jonathan. The former must be portly in figure, and either aggressive or benevolent as men according to the circumstances in which he may find himself in relation to representatives of other and to him foreign nationalities. He must be dressed in a low-crowned, broad-brimmed hat, an old-fashioned swallow-tail coat with hip pockets, and breeches and top boots. His hair must be curly, with small side whiskers, and his complexion must be florid. A hunting crop or a stout walking stick complete the picture. Cousin Jonathan, on the other hand, must be tall, thin, and angular, a sort of "Abe" Lincoln figure, with aquiline nose, a thin-lipped, firm mouth, a chin beard, and long lank hair, brushed back behind the ears. He must wear a swallow-tail coat, possibly to show blood kinship with John Bull, a star-spangled vest, and striped trousers over Wellington boots.

His ordinary attitude is to stand with his left hand caressing his chin-tuft, and a truculent sixshooter in his right. Occasionally a bowie knife is exhibited. Of course, as everybody knows, neither the Britisher nor the United States citizen dresses or looks like these examples.

How is it then that these types still exist in the caricatures and allegorical pictures of the two countries?

The reason is to be found in the fact that there is no continuity so continuous, no permanence so permanent as the stereotyped conventionality. The pictorial types which I have described were evolved before the middle of the nineteenth century, and they were arrived at as representing roughly a sort of common denominator of each people. John Bull was then more agricultural than he is not now, (to use a French form of expression;) hence his topboots and hunting crop. And perhaps he was then more blatant in his benevolence and more benevolent in his blatancy than he is now.

Cousin Jonathan, too, was evolved from a British bird's-eye view, which, perhaps, was not at that time an entirely sympathetic one. The physical part of this imaginary type was founded, it seems to me, very largely upon the strikingly national personality of President Lincoln. Even if this was not so, it is safe to say that his form and features confirmed and accentuated the British caricaturist's conception of the American common denominator.

Cousin Jonathan and John Bull—The Conventional Types.

Capt. Mahan as Cousin Jonathan.

At any rate these are the two types that appear in the political history of the two countries as depicted in caricature during the last fifty years or more.

It is only in accordance with human nature that John Bull's idea of his own common denominator is rather more flattering than that of his cousin. But Cousin Jonathan has accepted the types—with modifications which occasionally and quite naturally shift the balance of superior virtue to the other side.

The topboots and the six-shooter are nowadays things of the past. John Bull is no longer an agricultural figure. He is commercial, is learning to hustle, and a part of him hankers after tariffs.

Cousin Jonathan has shaved off his chin beard, developed imperial instincts, has society wedding breakfasts on horseback, and indulges in fashionable functions as fanciful as any devised by Marie Antoinette, and such as only a Lancret or a Watteau could do justice to.

And yet whenever a caricaturist, either on this or on the other side of the herring pond, wants to represent a typical Briton or American the old properties are unhesitatingly brought out for use on the pictorial stage, topboots, hunting crop, star-spangled vest, striped "pants," and all. Every now and then some one is struck by this anachronism and writes to the papers to raise the question of whether it is not time other and more up-to-date types should be used. It is all in vain. It is just as difficult to alter an accepted common denominator as it would be in England to try and alter a rubric in the Prayer Book because there is a conflict of opinion as to its meaning.

Accepted Types Wrong.

It is very easy to demonstrate by personal instances that these accepted conventional types are all wrong.

We in England all know and love Mr. Choate; he is a persona grata wherever he goes; when we want him for a public dinner or a social function he is the focus for the fixture of the date, and there is joy when he consents. There are no stars on his waistcoat or stripes on his trousers, he does not wear square-toed Wellington boots, and it is safe to say that even if he has a hip-pocket there is no six-shooter concealed therein. But yet he is an American citizen to the backbone. At the same time he could make up easily and admirably as John Bull. The British national properties of the broad-brimmed, low-crowned hat, the breeches, and topboots, would suit his personality perfectly, and the only thing artificial he would require would be just a little bit of whisker on each side of his cheeks. He would certainly make an exceptionally intelligent looking John, with more keenness and humor in his face than is generally expressed in the John Bull of British caricature, but we would accept him with acclamation as our new type.

On the other hand, take our Prime Minister, Mr. Arthur Balfour. He would want more making up to personate John Bull than Mr. Beerbohm Tree requires to play Falstaff, and even then it would be a failure.

The Marquis of Lansdowne, the British Foreign Minister, again does not correspond, either in face or form, with the conventional British type. He is slim, graceful, and courtly, and would be lost in John Bull's clothes and boots and hat. Mr. Chamberlain, too, would be equally lost if he dressed for the character of the John Bull of the ante-free-trade days, and as a national type he would not be in it with Mr. Choate. But dress him up as Cousin Jonathan and give him a chin-tuft and he would beat Mr. Choate hollow in an International type competition. And so would Mr. Gerald Balfour, the President of the Board of Trade, Mr. Arthur Balfour's brother. His figure would fit in well, and the six-shooter would harmonize with the hankering after the revolver of retaliation, of which he is suspected by free traders.

But no amount of demonstrations such as these will bring about a change in our conventional pictorial types, for if the caricaturists of the two countries are deprived of the familiar properties which they have used for so long, what are they to substitute for them? How are we to evolve new and recognizable national common denominators? There are perhaps little differences of sartorial detail which enable the American to recognize the Briton and the Briton to identify his transatlantic cousin, but they are far too subtle to have to rely upon instead of the topboots on one side and the star-spangled waistcoat on the other.

And besides I am not quite sure whether after all there is not some crude germ of truth in the accepted figures of John Bull and Cousin Jonathan. I was present at a dinner in London a few weeks since where Capt. Mahan was the guest of the evening. The company was largely composed of Englishmen interested in imperial and navy matters, and it struck me while looking around the tables that there was a good deal of John Bull about, and that Capt. Mahan himself might well figure as a modern type of Cousin Jonathan, but with a refinement of face and bearing which was generally absent from British caricatures of his American relative fifty years ago.

Wise In His Generation

MRS. BROWNE looked across the breakfast table to whom her husband sat, dividing his attention between his beefsteak and his morning paper.

"My dear," she said, nervously, "I am worried sick about Phyllis."

"Eh? What's that?" ejaculated her husband, looking up suddenly.

"About Phyllis, you know," Mrs. Browne repeated. "I can't do a thing with the child."

"She never would come to meals in time," replied Mr. Brown, easily, as he again directed his attention to his paper. "It's a poor time to begin to worry about it now, my love."

"It isn't that," returned his wife. "It's the way she laces. The child is scarcely sixteen, and it's something dreadful. I can almost put my two hands around her waist, and every day she draws herself in smaller and smaller. I have tried every argument I could think of to make her stop, but I might as well talk to a wooden image for all the impression my words make."

"What have you said to her?" Phyllis's father asked.

"Said to her? Well, as I told you, I have used about every argument available. I told her she was ruining her figure and ably paving the way for consumption; that at any rate she was injuring her entire constitution and laying up life-long misery and a probable surgical treatment for herself. There was scarcely a thing I did not say."

"Just like a woman," replied the father of Phyllis with a grunt. "Just leave Phyllis to me, my dear."

Mrs. Browne seemed about to protest, but at that moment the swish of Phyllis's skirts was heard on the stairs, and she forebore to speak.

As his daughter entered Mr. Browne glanced casually up to say good morning; then he looked at her rather sharply.

"Is it very cold out this morning, Phyllis?" he inquired.

"Why, I don't know, papa. I haven't been out yet."

"No?" said her father in a surprised tone. "You look as though you had just returned from an invigorating walk."

"How funny you are, papa. You know I never go out before breakfast," Phyllis replied.

Her father made no further remark, but Phyllis noticed that he glanced at her quizzically several times as the breakfast progressed, and somehow she felt uncomfortable. She could not imagine why her father should look at her in such a manner, and during a pause in the conversation, "I hope you are not getting into the habit of drinking champagne and wine when you are out with other young people. You know, my dear, your mother and I have always been most particular about—"

"Heavens, father! What is the matter this morning? I never touch a drop of anything except water and tea and coffee when I am out with any one or anywhere."

"I beg your pardon, my dear," Mr. Browne returned humbly, and said nothing further until Phyllis, having hastily finished her breakfast and left the room, Mr. Browne inquired quite audibly of his wife:

"What on earth makes Phyllis's nose so red of late? She looks as though she had come in out of a northeaster this morning."

And the mother of Phyllis, who was not at all stupid, and who noticed, moreover, that the rustle of Phyllis's skirts on the stairs had suddenly ceased, returned in the most casual, but perfectly distinct of tones: "Well, Harold, I don't think the child—er—indulges at all. But she does lace so terribly, I tell her—"

But Phyllis's skirts had suddenly swished up the remainder of the stairs, and her mother did not bother to complete the sentence.

A few moments later, when Mrs. Browne went up stairs, she found her daughter gazing at herself anxiously in the mirror.

"Mother, do you think my nose is growing red?" Phyllis inquired.

"Oh, my dear, did you—"

When she next saw Phyllis, Mrs. Browne had the satisfaction of noting that her daughter's waistline had expanded fully two inches; a fact which proved that Mr. Browne was a man wise in his generation and one who understood the feminine mind.

THE WILY TRANSFER MAN.

"I BELIEVE more 'skins' try to do the trolley company out of a transfer on this corner than anywhere else in the city," said a man who lives in a flat at Lexington Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street. "I have sat at the window many a half hour watching the slick manner in which some of them do it, and the equally clever style in which the man who hands out the transfers on the curb catches cigar or ten persons an hour who are not sharp enough to steal a peanut from the pushcart of a blind man. Most of them get off with a call-down that everybody around listens to, but some men, especially if they are young, get the toe of the transfer man's boot.

"'Looks easy to fool him,' said my wife the other evening, 'but if you think it is, why don't you go out and try it?'

"There was a new man on that day. I put on my hat and coat and left the house. My wife and daughter were looking on from the window. With a caution and confidence born of long watching I dodged behind an up-town car and fell in line with the passengers moving toward the transfer.
